

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

IN preparing notes for this edition of the Lays, the editor has had in mind chiefly the needs of the non-classical student, to whom the text presents much that he is not at all familiar with. What any reader needs, in order to derive the greatest satisfaction from the reading, is a clear appreciation of the circumstances and situations as they might appear to a Roman for whom the Lays are assumed to have been written. To go further than this, and make the Lays a basis for the extended study of Roman history, geography, mythology, and antiquities, would, in the editor's opinion, be a mistake. The author deemed his own introductions to the several Lays to be sufficient; but these take for granted a certain amount of knowledge that young readers cannot fairly be assumed to possess; and even the customary explanatory notes, unless inordinately extended, leave something to be desired. One needs to read at some length the accounts that historians have given of Rome in the early days, in order to surround himself with the right atmosphere, so to speak, in which to read the Lays with the keenest appreciation. Any good history of Rome that has a good index may be used for the purpose here indicated.

The editor has not often yielded to the ever-present temptation to give the meanings of words that can be found in a dictionary. Some such words need additional explanation or illustration, but in general the student should learn to depend upon his own research.

A map of Etruria and Latium and parts adjacent and a map of early Rome have been provided, with the idea that it is well for the reader to associate a "local habitation" with the names that he encounters, and that maps are better than notes for this purpose. Places not to be found in the maps are referred to in the notes.

The texts of the early editions and of several later editions, English and American, have been carefully collated. It was with much hesitation that the editor ventured to make essential changes in the original punctuation, which has been followed in most of the subsequent editions that he has examined. He decided to make them, however, in the conviction that a system of punctuation more in accordance with present usage in this country would make the reading easier. A similar explanation may be made of a few changes in spelling.

A pronouncing vocabulary of proper names (according to the English method) will, it is hoped, be found useful to many readers.

The editor gratefully acknowledges his obligations to Mr. William Tappan for valuable criticisms and suggestions.

INTRODUCTION

THOMAS BABINGTON MACAULAY, son of Zachary Macaulay, an eminent philanthropist, was born Oct. 25, 1800, at Rothley Temple, Leicestershire, England. He was graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1822, and in 1824 was elected a Fellow of Trinity, remaining there till 1825. He entered Parliament in 1830. In 1834 he was made a member of the Supreme Council of India, and soon proceeded to Calcutta, where he remained till 1838. He was again elected to Parliament in 1839, appointed War-secretary in 1840, and Paymaster-general in 1846. In 1847 he was defeated in his canvass for Parliament, but was re-elected in 1852. In 1857 he was raised to the peerage of Great Britain under the title of Baron Macaulay of Rothley. He died Dec. 28, 1859, at his residence, Holly Lodge, London, and was buried in Westminster Abbey in the "Poets' Corner."

In his earliest childhood Macaulay gave evidence of the remarkable intellectual gifts with which nature had endowed him, and of his decided bent towards literary pursuits. Before he was eight years old he had written a Compendium of Universal History and a romance entitled The Battle of Cheviot. A little later he composed poems of great length. These juvenile productions are said to have been creditable performances for one of his age, or, as Hannah More said of some hymns that he had composed, "quite extraordinary for such a baby." They are mentioned here only to show how early his mental activity began to display itself.

At college he acquired a brilliant reputation as a scholar and debater, though he did not reach the highest college rank on account of his dislike of mathematical studies. He twice received the Chancellor's medal for excellence in English verse.

At the age of twenty-six he was admitted to the bar; but after a year or two he found that the law was not his vocation, and soon abandoned it altogether. Meanwhile fame was coming to him from other directions. In 1825 his first contribution to the Edinburgh Review, the essay on Milton, appeared, and it at once became evident that a new star had risen on the literary horizon. He continued to write for the Review for nearly twenty years, during which time appeared the celebrated essays on Lord Bacon, Bunyan, Lord Clive, Warren Hastings, and others, all marked by the same profundity of learning, the same wealth and aptness of illustration, the same brilliancy of fancy, the same critical acumen, and the same felicities of style that characterized his first effort.

In his political career Macaulay was an ardent Whig; but he never sacrificed his convictions of what was right to mere expediency or to popular clamor. It was his independence that cost him his seat in Parliament in 1847. In Parliament he was a skilful and ready debater, and his reputation as an exceptionally brilliant orator always attracted crowds of eager listeners whenever it was known that he was to speak.

His services in India were of great value to the government and to the people of that country. He drafted a penal code, which, after much discussion and revision, became the code under which criminal law is now administered throughout the Indian empire. He also set on foot a system of national education, which has since spread over the whole of India.

The History of England was to be the crowning work of Macaulay's life, and that upon which his fame should chiefly rest. He gradually gave up all thought of further political preferment, devoting the last years of his life almost exclusively to the immense labor involved in the prosecution of this work. Unfortunately, he lived to complete only five volumes. When the first two volumes were issued, in 1848, they were received with remarkable enthusiasm on both sides of the Atlantic. In fact, no similar work had ever met with such a reception.

In the height of his fame as a statesman, orator, and writer, Macaulay achieved also great social distinction, for to his other accomplishments he added that of being a very entertaining converser and story-teller. "His family breakfast table was covered with cards of invitation to dinner from every quarter of London."

He was altogether charming in his domestic relations. He was never married, but seemed to live for his sister Hannah, to whom he was devotedly attached, and whose children he treated as his own.

No account of Macaulay, however brief, is complete without mention of his prodigious memory. He seemed to remember without effort everything that he had ever read or heard, even to the minutest details. "At one period of his life he was known to say that, if by some miracle of vandalism all copies of Paradise Lost and The Pilgrim's Progress were destroyed off the face of the earth, he would undertake to reproduce them both from recollection whenever a revival of learning came."¹ Even towards the end of his life he would sometimes devote his leisure hours to testing his memory. "I walked in the portico," he writes in October, 1857, "and learned by heart the noble Fourth Act of the Merchant of Venice. There are four hundred lines, of which I knew a hundred and fifty. I made myself perfect master of the whole, the prose letter included, in two hours.”¹ On one occasion, in answer to a friendly challenge to a feat of memory, he drew off at once a full list of the Senior Wranglers at Cambridge, with their dates and colleges, for the hundred years during which the names of Senior Wranglers had been recorded in the University Calendar.

Through all his varied career he never ceased to keep up his acquaintance with classic literature. Even in the midst of the turmoil of political life and the incessant demands of official position, he found time to read again and again the works that most men close forever when they leave college.

In his correspondence and in his journal he makes frequent reference to this habit, as, for example: “Calcutta, Dec. 30, 1835. . . . During the last thirteen months I have read Æschylus twice; Sophocles twice; Euripides once; Pindar twice; Callimachus; Apollonius Rhodius; Quintus Calaber; Theocritus twice; Herodotus; Thucydides; almost all Xenophon’s works; almost all Plato; Aristotle’s Politics, and a good deal of his Organon,—besides dipping elsewhere in him; the whole of Plutarch’s Lives; about half of Lucian; two or three books of Athenæus; Plautus twice; Terence twice; Lucretius twice; Catullus; Tibullus; Propertius; Lucan; Statius; Silius Italicus; Livy; Velleius Paterculus; Sallust; Caesar; and, lastly, Cicero.”²

Macaulay’s purpose in writing the Lays he has fully explained in the preface. A few additional statements and remarks about them are worth quoting. Writing to the editor of the Edinburgh Review in July, 1842, he says: “You are acquainted, no doubt, with Perizonius’s theory about the early Roman history,—a theory which Niebuhr revived, and which Arnold³ has adopted as fully established. I have myself not the smallest doubt of its truth. It is that the stories of the birth of Romulus and Remus, the fight of the Horatii and Curiatii, and all the other romantic tales which fill the first three or four books of Livy, came from the lost ballads of the early Romans. I amused myself in India with trying to restore some of these long-perished poems. Arnold saw two of them and wrote to me in such terms of eulogy that I have been induced to correct and complete them. There are four of them, and I think that, though they are but trifles, they may pass for scholarlike and not inelegant trifles. I must prefix short prefaces to them, and I think of publishing them next November in a small volume."¹

The following extract from a letter to the same person, written Nov. 16, 1842, after the Lays had been published, shows something of his own opinion regarding them: "I am glad that you like my Lays, and the more glad because I know that, from good-will to me, you must have been anxious about their fate. I do not wonder at your misgivings. I should have felt similar misgivings if I had learned that any person, however distinguished by talents and knowledge, whom I knew as a writer only by prose works, was about to publish a volume of poetry. Had I seen advertised a poem by Mackintosh, by Dugald Stewart, or even by Burke, I should have augured nothing but failure; and I am far from putting myself on a level even with the least of the three. So much the better for me. Where people look for no merit, a little merit goes a long way; and, without the smallest affectation of modesty, I confess that the success of my little book has far exceeded its just claims. I shall be in no hurry to repeat the experiment; for I am well aware that a second attempt would be made under much less favorable circumstances. A far more severe test would now be applied to my verses. I shall, therefore, like a wise gamester, leave off while I am a winner, and not cry Double or Quits."²

In his journal, under date Sept. 9, 1850, he writes: "Those poems have now been eight years published. They still sell, and seem still to give pleasure. I do not rate them high; but I do not remember that any better poetry has been published since."¹

The remarkable popularity of the Lays from the very first shows that Macaulay struck a responsive chord in the hearts of old and young alike. They were received with the warmest praise not only by the public but by the reviewers, only now and then one finding serious fault with them. Some later critics, however, have gone so far as to assert that Macaulay was no poet — that the Lays are not poetry; but no amount of hostile criticism, not even the great name of Matthew Arnold, seems to lessen the favor in which they are still held.

The following passages, quoted from various sources, will be of interest to the student.

"You are very right in admiring Macaulay, who has a noble, clear, metallic note in his soul, and makes us ready by it for battle. I very much admire Mr. Macaulay, and could scarcely read his ballads and keep lying down. They seemed to draw me up to my feet, as the mesmeric powers are said to do."²

"It is the great merit of these poems that they are free from ambition or exaggeration. Nothing seems overdone — no tawdry piece of finery disfigures the simplicity of the plan that has been chosen. They seem to have been framed with great artistical skill — with much self-denial and abstinence from anything incongruous — and with a very successful imitation of the effects intended to be represented. Set every here and there, images of beauty and expressions of feeling are thrown out that are wholly independent of Rome or the Romans, and that appeal to the widest sensibilities of the human heart. In point of homeliness of thought and language, there is often a boldness which none but a man conscious of great powers of writing would have ventured to show."¹

" . . . the pinchbeck Roman ballads of Lord Macaulay."

"Let me frankly say that, to my mind, a man's power to detect the ring of false metal in those Lays is a good measure of his fitness to give an opinion about poetical matters at all."²

"The merits of Macaulay's poetry are similar to his prose, except that his verse is characterized by more imagination. The same living energy, however, animates both. He is a man of the most extensive acquirements, possessing the power of representing his knowledge in magnificent pictures. He has a quick sympathy with whatever addresses the passions and the fancy, and a truly masculine mind. His style alternates between copiousness and condensation, and the transitions are contrived with consummate skill. The most brilliant and rapid of all contemporary writers, his poetry is an array of strong thoughts and glittering fancies bounding along on a rushing stream of feeling. It has almost the appearance of splendid impromptu composition. The 'Lay' of 'Virginia' contains some exquisite delineations of the affections, full of natural pathos and a certain serene beauty, somewhat different from Macaulay's usual martial tone."³

² Matthew Arnold, in On Translating Homer.

³ E. P. Whipple, in Essays and Reviews, vol. i, p. 340 (1848).

“In them [the Roman ballads] are repeated all the merits and all the defects of the Essays. The men and women are mere enumerations of qualities; the battle-pieces are masses of uncombined incidents: but the characteristics of the periods treated have been caught and reproduced with perfect accuracy. The setting of Horatius, which belongs to the earliest days of Rome, is totally different from the setting of the Prophecy of Capys, which belongs to the time when Rome was fast acquiring the mastery over Italy; and in each case the setting is studiously and remarkably exact. In these poems, again, there is the same prodigious learning, the same richness of illustration, which distinguish the Essays; and they are adorned with a profusion of metaphor and aptness of epithets which is most admirable.”¹

“And he knows, too, how to stir the blood of the average Englishman. He understands most thoroughly the value of concentration, unity, and simplicity. Every speech or essay forms an artistic whole, in which some distinct moral is vigorously driven home by a succession of downright blows. This strong rhetorical instinct is shown conspicuously in the Lays of Ancient Rome, which, whatever we may say of them as poetry, are an admirable specimen of rhymed rhetoric. We know how good they are when we see how incapable are modern ballad-writers in general of putting the same swing and fire into their verses. Compare, for example, Aytoun’s Lays of the Cavaliers, as the most obvious parallel: —

Not swifter pours the avalanche
Adown the steep incline,
That rises o’er the parent springs
Of rough and rapid Rhine,

than certain Scotch heroes over an entrenchment. Place this mouthing by any parallel passage in Macaulay: —

Now, by our sire Quirinus,
It was a goodly sight
To see the thirty standards
Swept down the tide of flight.

So flies the spray in Adria
When the black squall doth blow.
So corn-sheaves in the flood time
Spin down the whirling Po.

And so on, in verses which innumerable schoolboys of inferior pretensions to Macaulay's know by heart. And in such cases the verdict of the schoolboy is perhaps more valuable than that of the literary connoisseur. There are, of course, many living poets who can do tolerably something of far higher quality which Macaulay could not do at all. But I don't know who, since Scott, could have done this particular thing. Possibly Mr. Kingsley might have approached it, or the poet, if he would have condescended so far, who sang the bearing of the good news from Ghent to Aix. In any case, the feat is significant of Macaulay's true power. It looks easy; it involves no demands upon the higher reasoning or imaginative powers: but nobody will believe it to be easy who observes the extreme rarity of a success in a feat so often attempted." ¹

“The chorus of enthusiastic applause with which the Lays were received — Macaulay's veteran adversary, Christopher North, shouting with the loudest, — has not, perhaps, been uniformly echoed by the critics of latter days; but with the far more important audience which lies outside the little circle of self-appointed judges and accepts their judgments only when it agrees with them, they have never lost their popularity. Every schoolboy knows them, to use a favorite phrase of Macaulay's own, though schoolboys are not usually partial to poetry; but to the minstrelsy of Scott or Macaulay — it is much to mention them together — no healthy-minded boy refuses to listen, nor should we think much of the boy who could not declaim some of the fiery sentences of Icilius, or describe exactly the manner of the death of Ocnus or Aruns, Seius or Lausulus. Of older readers it is less necessary to speak, as he who has known Macaulay's Lays in his childhood has no occasion to refer to them again. There is an unfading charm in the swing and vigor of the lines, which bring to our ears the very sound of the battle, the clash of steel and the rushing of the horses, 'the noise of the captains and the shouting.' 'A cut and thrust style,' Wilson called it, 'without any flourish — Scott's style when his blood was up and the first words came like a vanguard impatient for battle.' The praise is scarcely extravagant."¹

"His ballads have the clear resonance, the metallic note of the trumpet."²

"The Battle of Ivry, though not so careful and finished in language as the Lays, is equal to any of them in fire. It is full also of what is called local color and those picturesque touches which delight the admirers of the pseudo-antique."³

MACAULAY'S
LAYS OF ANCIENT ROME

PREFACE¹

THAT what is called the history of the Kings and early Consuls of Rome is to a great extent fabulous, few scholars have, since the time of Beaufort, ventured to deny. It is certain that, more than three hundred and sixty years after the date ordinarily assigned for the foundation of the city, 5 the public records were, with scarcely an exception, destroyed by the Gauls. It is certain that the oldest annals of the commonwealth were compiled more than a century and a half after this destruction of the records. It is certain, therefore, that the great Latin writers of the Augustan age did not possess those materials without which a trustworthy account of the infancy of the republic could not possibly be framed. Those writers own, indeed, that the chronicles to which they had access were filled with battles that were never fought and Consuls that were never 15 inaugurated; and we have abundant proof that, in these chronicles, events of the greatest importance, such as the issue of the war with Porsena and the issue of the war with Brennus, were grossly misrepresented. Under these circumstances, a wise man will look with great suspicion on 20 the legend which has come down to us. He will perhaps be inclined to regard the princes who are said to have founded the civil and religious institutions of Rome, the son of Mars and the husband of Egeria, as mere mythological personages, of the same class with Perseus and Ixion. As he draws nearer and nearer to the confines

5 of authentic history, he will become less and less hard of belief. He will admit that the most important parts of the narrative have some foundation in truth. But he will distrust almost all the details, not only because they seldom rest on any solid evidence, but also because he will 10 constantly detect in them, even when they are within the limits of physical possibility, that peculiar character, more easily understood than defined, which distinguishes the creations of the imagination from the realities of the world in which we live.

15 The early history of Rome is indeed far more poetical than anything else in Latin literature. The loves of the Vestal and the God of War, the cradle laid among the reeds of Tiber, the fig-tree, the she-wolf, the shepherd's cabin, the recognition, the fratricide, the rape of the 20 Sabines, the death of Tarpeia, the fall of Hostus Hostilius, the struggle of Mettus Curtius through the marsh, the women rushing with torn raiment and dishevelled hair between their fathers and their husbands, the nightly meetings of Numa and the Nymph by the well in the 25 sacred grove, the fight of the three Romans and the three Albans, the purchase of the Sibylline books, the crime of Tullia, the simulated madness of Brutus, the ambiguous reply of the Delphian oracle to the Tarquins, the wrongs of Lucretia, the heroic actions of Horatius Cocles, of 30 Scævola, and of Clœlia, the battle of Regillus won by the aid of Castor and Pollux, the defence of Cremera, the touching story of Coriolanus, the still more touching story of Virginia, the wild legend about the draining of the Alban lake, the combat between Valerius Corvus and the gigantic Gaul, are among the many instances which will at once suggest themselves to every reader.

In the narrative of Livy, who was a man of fine imagination, these stories retain much of their genuine character. Nor could even the tasteless Dionysius distort and mutilate them into mere prose. The poetry shines, in spite of him, through the dreary pedantry of his eleven books. It is discernible in the most tedious and in the most superficial modern works on the early times of Rome. It enlivens the dulness of the Universal History, and gives a charm to the most meagre abridgments of Goldsmith. 5 10

Even in the age of Plutarch there were discerning men who rejected the popular account of the foundation of Rome, because that account appeared to them to have the air, not of a history, but of a romance or a drama. 15 Plutarch, who was displeased at their incredulity, had nothing better to say in reply to their arguments than that chance sometimes turns poet, and produces trains of events not to be distinguished from the most elaborate plots which are constructed by art.¹ But though the existence of a poetical element in the early history of the Great City was detected so many years ago, the first critic who distinctly saw from what source that poetical element had been derived was James Perizonius, one of the most acute and learned antiquaries of the seventeenth century. 25 His theory, which in his own days attracted little or no

notice, was revived in the present generation by Niebuhr, a man who would have been the first writer of his time, if his talent for communicating truths had borne any proportion to his talent for investigating them. That theory
5 has been adopted by several eminent scholars of our own country, particularly by the Bishop of St. David's, by Professor Malden, and by the lamented Arnold. It appears to be now generally received by men conversant with classical antiquity; and indeed it rests on such strong
10 proofs, both internal and external, that it will not be easily subverted. A popular exposition of this theory, and of the evidence by which it is supported, may not be without interest even for readers who are unacquainted with the ancient languages.

15 The Latin literature which has come down to us is of later date than the commencement of the Second Punic War, and consists almost exclusively of works fashioned on Greek models. The Latin metres, heroic, elegiac, lyric, and dramatic, are of Greek origin. The best Latin epic
20 poetry is the feeble echo of the Iliad and Odyssey. The best Latin eclogues are imitations of Theocritus. The plan of the most finished didactic poem in the Latin tongue was taken from Hesiod. The Latin tragedies are bad copies of the masterpieces of Sophocles and Eurip-
25 ides. The Latin comedies are free translations from Demophilus, Menander, and Apollodorus. The Latin philosophy was borrowed, without alteration, from the Portico and the Academy; and the great Latin orators constantly proposed to themselves as patterns the speeches
30 of Demosthenes and Lysias.

But there was an earlier Latin literature, a literature truly Latin, which has wholly perished, which had, indeed, almost wholly perished long before those whom we are in the habit of regarding as the greatest Latin writers were born. That literature abounded with metrical romances, such as are found in every country where there is much curiosity and intelligence, but little reading and writing. All human beings not utterly savage long for some information about past times, and are delighted by narratives 5 which present pictures to the eye of the mind. But it is only in very enlightened communities that books are readily accessible. Metrical composition, therefore, which in a highly civilized nation is a mere luxury, is in nations imperfectly civilized almost a necessary of life, and is 10 valued less on account of the pleasure which it gives to the ear than on account of the help which it gives to the memory. A man who can invent or embellish an interesting story, and put it into a form which others may easily retain in their recollection, will always be highly esteemed 15 by a people eager for amusement and information, but destitute of libraries. Such is the origin of ballad-poetry, a species of composition which scarcely ever fails to spring up and flourish in every society at a certain point in the progress towards refinement. Tacitus informs us that 20 songs were the only memorials of the past which the ancient Germans possessed. We learn from Lucan and from Ammianus Marcellinus that the brave actions of the ancient Gauls were commemorated in the verses of Bards. During many ages, and through many revolutions, min- 25 strely retained its influence over both the Teutonic and the Celtic race. The vengeance exacted by the spouse of Attila for the murder of Siegfried was celebrated in rhymes, of which Germany is still justly proud. The exploits of Athelstane were commemorated by the Anglo- 30 Saxons, and those of Canute by the Danes, in rude poems, of which a few fragments have come down to us. The chants of the Welsh harpers preserved, through ages of darkness, a faint and doubtful memory of Arthur. In the Highlands of Scotland may still be gleaned some relics of the old songs about Cuthullin and Fingal. The long struggle of the Servians against the Ottoman power was recorded in lays full of martial spirit. We learn from 5 Herrera that, when a Peruvian Inca died, men of skill were appointed to celebrate him in verses, which all the people learned by heart and sang in public on days of festival. The feats of Kurroglou, the great freebooter of Turkistan, recounted in ballads composed by himself, 10 are known in every village of Northern Persia. Captain Beechey heard the Bards of the Sandwich Islands recite the heroic achievements of Tamehameha, the most illustrious of their kings. Mungo Park found in the heart of Africa a class of singing-men, the only annalists of their 15 rude tribes, and heard them tell the story of the victory which Damel, the negro prince of the Jaloffs, won over Abdulkader, the Mussulman tyrant of Foota Torra. This species of poetry attained a high degree of excellence among the Castilians before they began to copy Tuscan 20 patterns. It attained a still higher degree of excellence among the English and the Lowland Scotch during the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth centuries. But it reached its full perfection in ancient Greece; for there can be no doubt that the great Homeric poems are gener- 25 ically ballads, though widely distinguished from all other ballads, and indeed from almost all other human compositions, by transcendent sublimity and beauty.

As it is agreeable to general experience that, at a certain stage in the progress of society, ballad-poetry should 30 flourish, so is it also agreeable to general experience that, at a subsequent stage in the progress of society, ballad-poetry should be undervalued and neglected. Knowledge advances; manners change; great foreign models of composition are studied and imitated. The phraseology of the old minstrels becomes obsolete. Their versification, which, having received its laws only from the ear, abounds in irregularities, seems licentious and uncouth. Their simplicity appears beggarly when compared with the quaint forms and gaudy coloring of such artists as Cowley and Gongora. The ancient lays, unjustly despised by the learned and polite, linger for a time in the memory of the vulgar, and are at length too often irretrievably lost. We cannot wonder that the ballads of Rome should have altogether disappeared, when we remember how very narrowly, in spite of the invention of printing, those of our own country and those of Spain escaped the same fate. There is indeed little doubt that oblivion covers many English songs equal to any that were published by Bishop Percy, and many Spanish songs as good as the best of those which have been so happily translated by Mr. Lockhart. Eighty years ago England possessed only one tattered copy of Childe Waters and Sir Cauline, and Spain only one tattered copy of the noble poem of The Cid. The snuff of a candle, or a mischievous dog, might in a moment have deprived the world forever of any of those fine compositions. Sir Walter Scott, who united to the fire of a great poet the minute curiosity and patient diligence of a great antiquary, was but just in time to save the precious relics of the Minstrelsy of the Border. In Germany, the lay of the Nibelungs had been long utterly forgotten, when, in the eighteenth century, it was for the first time printed from a manuscript in the old library of a noble family. In truth, the only people who, through their whole passage from simplicity to the highest civilization, never for a moment ceased to love and admire their old ballads, were the Greeks.

That the early Romans should have had ballad-poetry, and that this poetry should have perished, is therefore not strange. It would, on the contrary, have been strange if these things had not come to pass; and we should be justified in pronouncing them highly probable, even if we had no direct evidence on the subject. But we have 5 direct evidence of unquestionable authority.

Ennius, who flourished in the time of the Second Punic War, was regarded in the Augustan age as the father of Latin poetry. He was, in truth, the father of the second school of Latin poetry, the only school of which the works 10 have descended to us. But from Ennius himself we learn that there were poets who stood to him in the same relation in which the author of the romance of Count Alarcos stood to Garcilaso, or the author of the Lytell Geste of Robyn Hode to Lord Surrey. Ennius speaks of verses 15 which the Fauns and the Bards were wont to chant in the old time, when none had yet studied the graces of speech, when none had yet climbed the peaks sacred to the Goddesses of Grecian song. "Where," Cicero mournfully asks, "are those old verses now?"¹

 . . . "Quos olim Fauni vatesque canebant
 Cum neque Musarum scopulos quisquam superârat, Nec dicti studiosus erat.'"

Brutus, xviii

The Muses, it should be observed, are Greek divinities. The Italian Goddesses of verse were the Camœnæ. At a later period the appellations were used indiscriminately; but in the age of Ennius there was probably a distinction. In the epitaph of Nævius, who was the representative of the old Italian school of poetry, the Camœnæ, not the Muses, are represented as grieving for the loss of their votary. The 'Musarum scopuli' are evidently the peaks of Parnassus.

Scaliger, in a note on Varro (De Lingua Latina, lib. vi.), suggests, with great ingenuity, that the Fauns, who were represented by the superstition of later ages as a race of monsters, half gods and half brutes, may really have been a class of men who exercised in Latium, at a very remote period, the same functions which belonged to the Magians in Persia and to the Bards in Gaul.

Contemporary with Ennius was Quintus Fabius Pictor, the earliest of the Roman annalists. His account of the infancy and youth of Romulus and Remus has been preserved by Dionysius, and contains a very remarkable reference to the ancient Latin poetry. Fabius says that, in 5 his time, his countrymen were still in the habit of singing ballads about the Twins. "Even in the hut of Faustulus," — so these old lays appear to have run, — "the children of Rhea and Mars were, in port and in spirit, not like unto swineherds or cowherds, but such that men might well 10 guess them to be of the blood of Kings and Gods." ¹

Another argument may be urged which seems to deserve consideration. The author of the passage in question mentions a thatched hut, which in his time stood between the summit of Mount Palatine and the Circus. This hut, he says, was built by Romulus, and was constantly kept in repair at the public charge, but never in any respect embellished. Now, in the age of Dionysius there certainly was at Rome a thatched hut, said to have been that of Romulus. But this hut, as we learn from Vitruvius, stood, not near the Circus, but in the Capitol (Vit. ii. 1). If, therefore, we understand Dionysius to speak in his own person, we can reconcile his statement with that of Vitruvius only by supposing that there were at Rome, in the Augustan age, two thatched huts, both believed to have been built by Romulus, and both carefully repaired and held in high honor. The objections to such a supposition seem to be strong. Neither Dionysius nor Vitruvius speaks of more than one such hut. Dio Cassius informs us that twice, during the long administration of Augustus, the hut of Romulus caught fire (xlviii. 43, liv. 29). Had there been two such huts, would he not have told us of which he spoke? An English historian would hardly give an account of a fire at Queen's College without saying whether it was at Queen's College, Oxford, or at Queen's College, Cambridge. Marcus Seneca, Macrobius, and Conon, a Greek writer from whom Photius has made large extracts, mention only one hut of Romulus, that in the Capitol (M. Seneca, Contr. i. 6; Macrobius, Sat. i. 15; Photius, Bibl. 186). Ovid, Livy, Petronius, Valerius Maximus, Lucius Seneca, and St. Jerome mention only one hut of Romulus, without specifying the site (Ovid, Fasti, iii. 183; Liv. v. 53; Petronius, Fragm.; Val. Max. iv. 4; L. Seneca, Consolatio ad Helviam; D. Hieron. Ad Paulinianum de Didymo).

Cato the Censor, who also lived in the days of the Second Punic War, mentioned this lost literature in his lost work on the antiquities of his country. Many ages, he said, before his time, there were ballads in praise of illustrious men; and these ballads it was the fashion for the

The whole difficulty is removed if we suppose that Dionysius was merely quoting Fabius Pictor. Nothing is more probable than that the cabin, which in the time of Fabius stood near the Circus, might, long before the age of Augustus, have been transported to the Capitol, as the place fittest, by reason both of its safety and of its sanctity, to contain so precious a relic.

The language of Plutarch confirms this hypothesis. He describes with great precision the spot where Romulus dwelt, on the slope of Mount Palatine leading to the Circus; but he says not a word implying that the dwelling was still to be seen there. Indeed, his expressions imply that it was no longer there. The evidence of Solinus is still more to the point. He, like Plutarch, describes the spot where Romulus had resided, and says expressly that the hut had been there, but that in his time it was there no longer. The site, it is certain, was well remembered; and probably retained its old name, as Charing Cross and the Haymarket have done. This is probably the explanation of the words 'Casa Romuli' in Victor's description of the Tenth Region of Rome under Valentinian.

guests at banquets to sing in turn while the piper played. "Would," exclaims Cicero, "that we still had the old ballads of which Cato speaks!"¹

Valerius Maximus gives us exactly similar information, without mentioning his authority, and observes that the ancient Roman ballads were probably of more benefit to the young than all the lectures of the Athenian schools, and that to the influence of the national poetry were to be ascribed the virtues of such men as Camillus and Fabricius.²

Varro, whose authority on all questions connected with the antiquities of his country is entitled to the greatest respect, tells us that at banquets it was once the fashion for boys to sing, sometimes with and sometimes without instrumental music, ancient ballads in praise of men of former times. These young performers, he observes, were of unblemished character, a circumstance which he probably mentioned because among the Greeks, and indeed in his time among the Romans also, the morals of singing-boys were in no high repute.³

The testimony of Horace, though given incidentally, confirms the statements of Cato, Valerius Maximus, and Varro. The poet predicts that, under the peaceful administration of Augustus, the Romans will, over their full goblets, sing to the pipe, after the fashion of their fathers, the deeds of brave captains, and the ancient legends touching the origin of the city.¹

The proposition, then, that Rome had ballad-poetry is not merely in itself highly probable, but is fully proved by direct evidence of the greatest weight.

This proposition being established, it becomes easy to understand why the early history of the city is unlike almost everything else in Latin literature, native where almost everything else is borrowed, imaginative where almost everything else is prosaic. We can scarcely hesitate to pronounce that the magnificent, pathetic, and truly national legends, which present so striking a contrast to all that surrounds them, are broken and defaced fragments of that early poetry which, even in the age of Cato the Censor, had become antiquated, and of which Tully had never heard a line.

That this poetry should have been suffered to perish will not appear strange when we consider how complete was the triumph of the Greek genius over the public mind of Italy. It is probable that at an early period Homer and Herodotus furnished some hints to the Latin minstrels;¹ but it was not till after the war with Pyrrhus that the poetry of Rome began to put off its old Ausonian character. The transformation was soon consummated. The conquered, says Horace, led captive the conquerors. It was precisely at the time at which the Roman people rose to unrivalled political ascendancy that they stooped to pass under the intellectual yoke. It was precisely at the time at which the sceptre departed from Greece that the empire of her language and of her arts became universal and despotic. The revolution indeed was not effected without a struggle. Nævius seems to have been the last of the ancient line of poets. Ennius was the founder of a new dynasty. Nævius celebrated the First Punic War in Saturnian verse, the old national verse of Italy.²

² Cicero speaks highly in more than one place of this poem of Nævius; Ennius sneered at it, and stole from it.

As to the Saturnian measure, see Hermann's Elementa Doctrinae Metricæ, iii. 9.

The Saturnian line, according to the grammarians, consisted of two parts. The first was a catalectic dimeter iambic; the second was composed of three trochees. But the license taken by the early Latin poets seems to have been almost boundless. The most perfect Saturnian line which has been preserved was the work, not of a professional artist, but of an amateur:

‘Dabunt malum Metelli Nævio poetæ.’

There has been much difference of opinion among learned men respecting the history of this measure. That it is the same with a Greek measure used by Archilochus is indisputable. (Bentley, Phalaris, xi.) But in spite of the authority of Terentianus Maurus, and of the still higher authority of Bentley, we may venture to doubt whether the coincidence was not fortuitous. We constantly find the same rude and simple numbers in different countries, under circumstances which make it impossible to suspect that there has been imitation on either side. Bishop Heber heard the children of a village in Bengal singing ‘Radha, Radha,’ to the tune of ‘My boy Billy.’

Ennius sang the Second Punic War in numbers borrowed from the Iliad. The elder poet, in the epitaph which he wrote for himself, and which is a fine specimen of the early Roman diction and versification, plaintively boasted

Neither the Castilian nor the German minstrels of the Middle Ages owed anything to Paros or to ancient Rome. Yet both the poem of the Cid and the poem of the Nibelungs contain many Saturnian verses; as—

‘Estas nuevas á mio Cid eran venidas.’

‘Á mi lo dicen; á ti dan las orejades.’

‘Man möchte michel wunder von Sifride sagen.’

‘Wa ich den Künic vinde daz sol man mir sagen.’

Indeed there cannot be a more perfect Saturnian line than one which is sung in every English nursery—

‘The queen was in her parlor eating bread and honey;’

yet the author of this line, we may be assured, borrowed nothing from either Nævius or Archilochus.

On the other hand, it is by no means improbable that, two or three hundred years before the time of Ennius, some Latin minstrel may have visited Sybaris or Crotona, may have heard some verses of Archilochus sung, may have been pleased with the metre, and may have introduced it at Rome. Thus much is certain, that the Saturnian measure, if not a native of Italy, was at least so early and so completely naturalized there that its foreign origin was forgotten.

Bentley says, indeed, that the Saturnian measure was first brought from Greece into Italy by Nævius. But this is merely obiter dictum, to use a phrase common in our courts of law, and would not have been deliberately maintained by that incomparable critic, whose memory is held in reverence by all lovers of learning. The arguments which might be brought against Bentley’s assertion—for it is mere assertion, supported by no evidence—are innumerable. A few will suffice.

1. Bentley’s assertion is opposed to the testimony of Ennius. Ennius sneered at Nævius for writing on the First Punic War in verses such as the old Italian bards used before Greek literature had been studied. Now the poem of Nævius was in Saturnian that the Latin language had died with him.¹ Thus what to Horace appeared to be the first faint dawn of Roman literature, appeared to Nævius to be its hopeless setting. In truth, one literature was setting and another dawning.

The victory of the foreign taste was decisive; and indeed 5 we can hardly blame the Romans for turning away with contempt from the rude lays which had delighted their fathers, and giving their whole admiration to the immortal productions of Greece. The national romances, neglected by the great and the refined whose education had been 10 finished at Rhodes or Athens, continued, it may be supposed. Is it possible that Ennius could have used such expressions if the Saturnian verse had been just imported from Greece for the first time?

2. Bentley's assertion is opposed to the testimony of Horace. 'When Greece,' says Horace, 'introduced her arts into our uncivilized country, those rugged Saturnian numbers passed away.' Would Horace have said this if the Saturnian numbers had been imported from Greece just before the hexameter?

3. Bentley's assertion is opposed to the testimony of Festus and of Aurelius Victor, both of whom positively say that the most ancient prophecies attributed to the Fauns were in Saturnian verse.

4. Bentley's assertion is opposed to the testimony of Terentianus Maurus, to whom he has himself appealed. Terentianus Maurus does indeed say that the Saturnian measure, though believed by the Romans from a very early period ('credidit vetustas') to be of Italian invention, was really borrowed from the Greeks. But Terentianus Maurus does not say that it was first borrowed by Nævius. Nay, the expressions used by Terentianus Maurus clearly imply the contrary; for how could the Romans have believed, from a very early period, that this measure was the indigenous production of Latium, if it was really brought over from Greece in an age of intelligence and liberal curiosity, in the age which gave birth to Ennius, Plautus, Cato the Censor, and other distinguished writers? If Bentley's assertion were correct, there could have been no more doubt at Rome about the Greek origin of the Saturnian measure than about the Greek origin of hexameters or Sapphics.

posed, during some generations to delight the vulgar. While Virgil, in hexameters of exquisite modulation, described the sports of rustics, those rustics were still singing their wild Saturnian ballads.¹ It is not improbable that, at the time when Cicero lamented the irreparable loss of the poems mentioned by Cato, a search among the nooks of the Apennines as active as the search which Sir Walter Scott made among the descendants of the moss-troopers of Liddesdale might have brought to light many fine remains of ancient minstrelsy. No such search was made. The Latin ballads perished forever. Yet discerning critics have thought that they could still perceive in the early history of Rome numerous fragments of this lost poetry, as the traveller on classic ground sometimes finds, built into the heavy wall of a fort or convent, a pillar rich with acanthus leaves, or a frieze where the Amazons and Bacchanals seem to live. The theatres and temples of the Greek and the Roman were degraded into the quarries of the Turk and the Goth. Even so did the ancient Saturnian poetry become the quarry in which a crowd of orators and annalists found the materials for their prose.

It is not difficult to trace the process by which the old songs were transmuted into the form which they now wear. Funeral panegyric and chronicle appear to have been the intermediate links which connected the lost ballads with the histories now extant. From a very early period it was the usage that an oration should be pronounced over the remains of a noble Roman. The orator, as we learn from Polybius, was expected on such an occasion to recapitulate all the services which the ancestors of the deceased had, from the earliest time, rendered to the commonwealth. There can be little doubt that the speaker on whom this duty was imposed would make use of all the stories suited to his purpose which were to be found in the popular lays. There can be as little doubt that the family of an eminent man would preserve a copy of the speech which had been pronounced over his corpse. The compilers of the early chronicles would have recourse to these 5 speeches; and the great historians of a later period would have recourse to the chronicles.

It may be worth while to select a particular story, and to trace its probable progress through these stages. The description of the migration of the Fabian house to 10 Cremera is one of the finest of the many fine passages which lie thick in the earlier books of Livy. The Consul, clad in his military garb, stands in the vestibule of his house, marshalling his clan, three hundred and six fighting men, all of the same proud patrician blood, all worthy to 15 be attended by the fasces and to command the legions. A sad and anxious retinue of friends accompanies the adventurers through the streets; but the voice of lamentation is drowned by the shouts of admiring thousands.

As the procession passes the Capitol, prayers and vows 20 are poured forth, but in vain. The devoted band, leaving Janus on the right, marches to its doom through the Gate of Evil Luck. After achieving high deeds of valor against overwhelming numbers, all perish save one child, the stock from which the great Fabian race was destined again to 25 spring for the safety and glory of the commonwealth. That this fine romance, the details of which are so full of poetical truth, and so utterly destitute of all show of historical truth, came originally from some lay which had often been sung with great applause at banquets, is in the 30 highest degree probable. Nor is it difficult to imagine a mode in which the transmission might have taken place.

The celebrated Quintus Fabius Maximus, who died about twenty years before the First Punic War, and more than forty years before Ennius was born, is said to have been interred with extraordinary pomp. In the eulogy pronounced over his body all the great exploits of his ancestors were doubtless recounted and exaggerated. If 5 there were then extant songs which gave a vivid and touching description of an event, the saddest and the most glorious in the long history of the Fabian house, nothing could be more natural than that the panegyrist should borrow from such songs their finest touches, in order to

10 adorn his speech. A few generations later the songs would perhaps be forgotten, or remembered only by shepherds and vine-dressers. But the speech would certainly be preserved in the archives of the Fabian nobles. Fabius Pictor would be well acquainted with a document so inter-
15 esting to his personal feelings, and would insert large extracts from it in his rude chronicle. That chronicle, as we know, was the oldest to which Livy had access. Livy would at a glance distinguish the bold strokes of the forgotten poet from the dull and feeble narrative by which 20 they were surrounded, would retouch them with a delicate and powerful pencil, and would make them immortal.

That this might happen at Rome can scarcely be doubted; for something very like this has happened in several countries, and, among others, in our own. Perhaps 25 the theory of Perizonius cannot be better illustrated than by showing that what he supposes to have taken place in ancient times has, beyond all doubt, taken place in modern times.

“History,” says Hume with the utmost gravity, “has 30 preserved some instances of Edgar’s amours, from which, as from a specimen, we may form a conjecture of the rest.” He then tells very agreeably the stories of Elfreda and Elfrida, two stories which have a most suspicious air of romance, and which indeed greatly resemble, in their general character, some of the legends of early Rome. He cites, as his authority for these two tales, the chronicle of William of Malmesbury, who lived in the time of King Stephen. The great majority of readers suppose that the device by which Elfrida was substituted for her young 5 mistress, the artifice by which Athelwold obtained the hand of Elfrida, the detection of that artifice, the hunting party, and the vengeance of the amorous king, are things about which there is no more doubt than about the execution of Anne Boleyn or the slitting of Sir John Coventry's 10 nose. But when we turn to William of Malmesbury, we find that Hume, in his eagerness to relate these pleasant fables, has overlooked one very important circumstance. William does indeed tell both the stories; but he gives us distinct notice that he does not warrant their truth, 15 and that they rest on no better authority than that of ballads.¹

Such is the way in which these two well-known tales have been handed down. They originally appeared in a poetical form. They found their way from ballads into 20 an old chronicle. The ballads perished; the chronicle remained. A great historian, some centuries after the ballads had been altogether forgotten, consulted the chronicle. He was struck by the lively coloring of these ancient fictions; he transferred them to his pages; and 25 thus we find inserted, as unquestionable facts, in a narrative which is likely to last as long as the English tongue, the inventions of some minstrel whose works were probably never committed to writing, whose name is buried in oblivion, and whose dialect has become obsolete. It 30 must, then, be admitted to be possible, or rather highly probable, that the stories of Romulus and Remus, and of the Horatii and Curiatii, may have had a similar origin.

Castilian literature will furnish us with another parallel
5 case. Mariana, the classical historian of Spain, tells the story of the ill-starred marriage which the King Don Alonzo brought about between the heirs of Carrion and the two daughters of the Cid. The Cid bestowed a princely dower on his sons-in-law. But the young men were base
10 and proud, cowardly and cruel. They were tried in danger, and found wanting. They fled before the Moors, and once, when a lion broke out of his den, they ran and crouched in an unseemly hiding-place. They knew that they were despised, and took counsel how they might be 15 avenged. They parted from their father-in-law with many signs of love, and set forth on a journey with Doña Elvira and Doña Sol. In a solitary place the bridegrooms seized their brides, stripped them, scourged them, and departed, leaving them for dead. But one of the house of Bivar,
20 suspecting foul play, had followed the travellers in disguise. The ladies were brought back safe to the house of their father. Complaint was made to the king. It was adjudged by the Cortes that the dower given by the Cid should be returned, and that the heirs of Carrion,
25 together with one of their kindred, should do battle against three knights of the party of the Cid. The guilty youths would have declined the combat; but all their shifts were vain. They were vanquished in the lists and forever disgraced, while their injured wives were sought
30 in marriage by great princes.¹

Some Spanish writers have labored to show, by an examination of dates and circumstances, that this story is untrue. Such confutation was surely not needed; for the narrative is on the face of it a romance. How it found its way into Mariana's history is quite clear. He acknowledges his obligations to the ancient chronicles, and had doubtless before him the Cronica del famoso Cavallero Cid Ruy Diez Campeador, which had been printed 5 as early as the year 1552. He little suspected that all the most striking passages in this chronicle were copied from a poem of the twelfth century, a poem of which the language and versification had long been obsolete, but which glowed with no common portion of the fire of the Iliad. 10 Yet such was the fact. More than a century and a half after the death of Mariana, this venerable ballad, of which one imperfect copy on parchment, four hundred years old, had been preserved at Bivar, was for the first time printed. Then it was found that every interesting circumstance of 15 the story of the heirs of Carrion was derived by the eloquent Jesuit from a song of which he had never heard, and which was composed by a minstrel whose very name had long been forgotten.¹

Such, or nearly such, appears to have been the process 20 by which the lost ballad-poetry of Rome was transformed into history. To reverse that process, to transform some portions of early Roman history back into the poetry out of which they were made, is the object of this work.

In the following poems the author speaks, not in his 25 own person, but in the persons of ancient minstrels who know only what a Roman citizen, born three or four hundred years before the Christian era, may be supposed to have known, and who are in nowise above the passions and prejudices of their age and nation. To these imaginary poets must be ascribed some blunders which are so obvious that it is unnecessary to point them out. The real blunder would have been to represent these old poets

5 as deeply versed in general history and studious of chronological accuracy. To them must also be attributed the illiberal sneers at the Greeks, the furious party-spirit, the contempt for the arts of peace, the love of war for its own sake, the ungenerous exultation over the vanquished, 10 which the reader will sometimes observe. To portray a Roman of the age of Camillus or Curius as superior to national antipathies, as mourning over the devastation and slaughter by which empire and triumphs were to be won, as looking on human suffering with the sympathy of 15 Howard, or as treating conquered enemies with the delicacy of the Black Prince, would be to violate all dramatic propriety. The old Romans had some great virtues,—fortitude, temperance, veracity, spirit to resist oppression, respect for legitimate authority, fidelity in the observing 20 of contracts, disinterestedness, ardent patriotism; but Christian charity and chivalrous generosity were alike unknown to them.

It would have been obviously improper to mimic the manner of any particular age or country. Something has 25 been borrowed, however, from our own old ballads, and more from Sir Walter Scott, the great restorer of our ballad-poetry. To the Iliad still greater obligations are due; and those obligations have been contracted with the less hesitation, because there is reason to believe that 30 some of the old Latin minstrels really had recourse to that inexhaustible store of poetical images.

It would have been easy to swell this little volume to a very considerable bulk by appending notes filled with quotations; but to a learned reader such notes are not necessary ; for an unlearned reader they would have little interest ; and the judgment passed both by the learned and by the unlearned on a work of the imagination will always depend much more on the general character and spirit of such a work than on minute details.

HORATIUS

THERE can be little doubt that among those parts of early Roman history which had a poetical origin was the legend of Horatius Cocles. We have several versions of the story, and these versions differ from each other in points of no small importance. Polybius, there is reason 5 to believe, heard the tale recited over the remains of some Consul or Prætor descended from the old Horatian patricians ; for he introduces it as a specimen of the narratives with which the Romans were in the habit of embellishing their funeral oratory. It is remarkable that, according to 10 him, Horatius defended the bridge alone, and perished in the waters. According to the chronicles which Livy and Dionysius followed, Horatius had two companions, swam safe to shore, and was loaded with honors and rewards. 15

These discrepancies are easily explained. Our own literature, indeed, will furnish an exact parallel to what may have taken place at Rome. It is highly probable that the memory of the war of Porsena was preserved by compositions much resembling the two ballads which 20 stand first in the Relics of Ancient English Poetry. In both those ballads the English, commanded by the Percy, fight with the Scots, commanded by the Douglas. In one of the ballads the Douglas is killed by a nameless English archer, and the Percy by a Scottish spearman ; 25 in the other the Percy slays the Douglas in single combat, and is himself made prisoner. In the former Sir

Hugh Montgomery is shot through the heart by a Northumbrian bowman; in the latter he is taken, and exchanged for the Percy. Yet both the ballads relate to the same event, and that an event which probably took place within 5 the memory of persons who were alive when both the ballads were made. One of the minstrels says :

“ Old men that knowen the grounde well yenoughe
 Call it the battell of Otterburn :
 At Otterburn began this spurne
 10 Upon a monnyn day.
 Ther was the dougghte Doglas slean :
 The Perse never went away.”

The other poet sums up the event in the following lines :

15 “ Thys fraye bygan at Otterborne
 Bytwene the nyghte and the day :
 Ther the Dowglas lost hys lyfe,
 And the Percy was lede away.”

It is by no means unlikely that there were two old
 20 Roman lays about the defence of the bridge ; and that, while the story which Livy has transmitted to us was preferred by the multitude, the other, which ascribed the whole glory to Horatius alone, may have been the favorite with the Horatian house.

25 The following ballad is supposed to have been made about a hundred and twenty years after the war which it celebrates, and just before the taking of Rome by the Gauls. The author seems to have been an honest citizen, proud of the military glory of his country, sick of the 30 putes of factions, and much given to pining after good old times which had never really existed. The allusion, however, to the partial manner in which the public lands were allotted, could proceed only from a plebeian ; and the allusion to the fraudulent sale of spoils marks the date of the poem, and shows that the poet shared in the general discontent with which the proceedings of Camillus, after the taking of Veii, were regarded.

The penultimate syllable of the name Porsena has been shortened in spite of the authority of Niebuhr, who pronounces, without assigning any ground for his opinion, that Martial was guilty of a decided blunder in the line,

“Hanc spectare manum Porsena non potuit.”

It is not easy to understand how any modern scholar, whatever his attainments may be, — and those of Niebuhr were undoubtedly immense, — can venture to pronounce that Martial did not know the quantity of a word which he must have uttered and heard uttered a hundred times before he left school. Niebuhr seems also to have forgotten that Martial has fellow-culprits to keep him in countenance. Horace has committed the same decided blunder; for he gives us, as a pure iambic line,

“Minacis aut Etrusca Porsenæ manus.”

Silius Italicus has repeatedly offended in the same way, as when he says, “Cernitur effugiens ardentem Porsena dextram :”

and again,

“Clusinum vulgus, cum, Porsena magne, jubebas.”

A modern writer may be content to err in such company.

Niebuhr's supposition, that each of the three defenders of the bridge was the representative of one of the three patrician tribes, is both ingenious and probable, and has been adopted in the following poem.

HORATIUS

A LAY MADE ABOUT THE YEAR OF THE CITY CCCLX

I

LARS PORSENA of Clusium
 By the Nine Gods he swore
 That the great house of Tarquin
 Should suffer wrong no more.
 By the Nine Gods he swore it, 5
 And named a trysting day,
 And bade his messengers ride forth,
 East and west and south and north,
 To summon his array.

II

East and west and south and north 10
 The messengers ride fast,
 And tower and town and cottage
 Have heard the trumpet's blast.
 Shame on the false Etruscan
 Who lingers in his home, 15
 When Porsena of Clusium
 Is on the march for Rome !

III

The horsemen and the footmen
 Are pouring in amain
 From many a stately market-place, 20
 From many a fruitful plain ;
 From many a lonely hamlet,
 Which, hid by beech and pine,

Like an eagle's nest, hangs on the crest
Of purple Apennine ; 25

IV

From lordly Volaterræ,
Where scowls the far-famed hold
Piled by the hands of giants
For godlike kings of old ;
From sea-girt Populonia, 30
Whose sentinels descry
Sardinia's snowy mountain-tops
Fringing the southern sky ;

V

From the proud mart of Pisæ,
Queen of the western waves, 35
Where ride Massilia's triremes
Heavy with fair-haired slaves ;
From where sweet Clanis wanders
Through corn and vines and flowers ;
From where Cortona lifts to heaven 40
Her diadem of towers.

VI

Tall are the oaks whose acorns
Drop in dark Auser's rill ;
Fat are the stags that champ the boughs
Of the Ciminian hill ; 45
Beyond all streams Clitumnus
Is to the herdsman dear ;
Best of all pools the fowler loves
The great Volsinian mere.

VII

But now no stroke of woodman 50
 Is heard by Auser's rill ;
 No hunter tracks the stag's green path
 Up the Ciminian hill ;
 Unwatched along Clitumnus
 Grazes the milk-white steer ; 55
 Unharm'd the water-fowl may dip
 In the Volsinian mere.

VIII

The harvests of Arretium
 This year old men shall reap ;
 This year young boys in Umbro 60
 Shall plunge the struggling sheep ;
 And in the vats of Luna
 This year the must shall foam
 Round the white feet of laughing girls,
 Whose sires have marched to Rome. 65

IX

There be thirty chosen prophets,
 The wisest of the land,
 Who alway by Lars Porsena
 Both morn and evening stand ;
 Evening and morn the Thirty 70
 Have turned the verses o'er,
 Traced from the right on linen white
 By mighty seers of yore.

And with one voice the Thirty
 Have their glad answer given : 75

“Go forth, go forth, Lars Porsena ;
Go forth, beloved of Heaven ;
Go, and return in glory
To Clusium’s royal dome,
And hang round Nurscia’s altars
The golden shields of Rome.”

80

XI

And now hath every city
Sent up her tale of men ;
The foot are fourscore thousand,
The horse are thousands ten.
Before the gates of Sutrium
Is met the great array.
A proud man was Lars Porsena
Upon the trysting day.

85

XII

For all the Etruscan armies
Were ranged beneath his eye,
And many a banished Roman,
And many a stout ally ;
And with a mighty following
To join the muster came
The Tusculan Mamilius,
Prince of the Latian name.

90

95

XIII

But by the yellow Tiber
Was tumult and affright ;
From all the spacious champaign
To Rome men took their flight.

100

A mile around the city
 The throng stopped up the ways ;
 A fearful sight it was to see
 Through two long nights and days. 105

XIV

For aged folk on crutches,
 And women great with child,
 And mothers sobbing over babes
 That clung to them and smiled,
 And sick men borne in litters 110
 High on the necks of slaves,
 And troops of sunburnt husbandmen
 With reaping-hooks and staves,

XV

And droves of mules and asses
 Laden with skins of wine, 115
 And endless flocks of goats and sheep,
 And endless herds of kine,
 And endless trains of wagons,
 That creaked beneath the weight
 Of corn-sacks and of household goods, 120
 Choked every roaring gate.

XVI

Now from the rock Tarpeian
 Could the wan burghers spy
 The line of blazing villages
 Red in the midnight sky. 125
 The Fathers of the City
 They sat all night and day,
 For every hour some horseman came
 With tidings of dismay.

XVII

To eastward and to westward 130
 Have spread the Tuscan bands ;
 Nor house nor fence nor dovecote
 In Crustumerium stands.
 Verbenna down to Ostia
 Hath wasted all the plain ; 135
 Astur hath stormed Janiculum,
 And the stout guards are slain.

XVIII

I wis, in all the Senate
 There was no heart so bold
 But sore it ached and fast it beat, 140
 When that ill news was told.
 Forthwith uprose the Consul,
 Uprose the Fathers all ;
 In haste they girded up their gowns,
 And hied them to the wall. 145

XIX

They held a council standing
 Before the River-Gate ;
 Short time was there, ye well may guess,
 For musing or debate.
 Out spake the Consul roundly : 150
 " The bridge must straight go down ;
 For, since Janiculum is lost,
 Naught else can save the town."

XX

Just then a scout came flying,
 All wild with haste and fear : 155

“To arms ! to arms ! Sir Consul ;
Lars Porsena is here.”

On the low hills to westward
The Consul fixed his eye,
And saw the swarthy storm of dust 160
Rise fast along the sky.

XXI

And nearer fast and nearer
Doth the red whirlwind come ;
And louder still and still more loud,
From underneath that rolling cloud, 165
Is heard the trumpet’s war-note proud,
The trampling and the hum.
And plainly and more plainly
Now through the gloom appears,
Far to left and far to right, 170
In broken gleams of dark-blue light,
The long array of helmets bright,
The long array of spears.

XXII

And plainly and more plainly,
Above that glimmering line, 175
Now might ye see the banners
Of twelve fair cities shine ;
But the banner of proud Clusium
Was highest of them all,
The terror of the Umbrian, 180
The terror of the Gaul.

XXIII

And plainly and more plainly
Now might the burghers know,

By port and vest, by horse and crest,
 Each warlike Lucumo. 185
 There Cilnius of Arretium
 On his fleet roan was seen ;
 And Astur of the fourfold shield,
 Girt with the brand none else may wield,
 Tolumnius with the belt of gold, 190
 And dark Verbenna from the hold
 By reedy Thrasymene.

XXIV

Fast by the royal standard,
 O'erlooking all the war,
 Lars Porsena of Clusium 195
 Sat in his ivory car.
 By the right wheel rode Mamilius,
 Prince of the Latian name ;
 And by the left false Sextus,
 That wrought the deed of shame. 200

XXV

But when the face of Sextus
 Was seen among the foes,
 A yell that rent the firmament
 From all the town arose.
 On the house-tops was no woman 205
 But spat towards him and hissed,
 No child but screamed out curses
 And shook its little fist.

XXVI

But the Consul's brow was sad,
 And the Consul's speech was low, 210

And darkly looked he at the wall,
 And darkly at the foe.
 "Their van will be upon us
 Before the bridge goes down ;
 And if they once may win the bridge, 215
 What hope to save the town?"

XXVII

Then out spake brave Horatius,
 The Captain of the Gate :
 "To every man upon this earth
 Death cometh soon or late. 220
 And how can man die better
 Than facing fearful odds,
 For the ashes of his fathers
 And the temples of his Gods,

XXVIII

"And for the tender mother 225
 Who dandled him to rest,
 And for the wife who nurses
 His baby at her breast,
 And for the holy maidens
 Who feed the eternal flame, 230
 To save them from false Sextus
 That wrought the deed of shame ?

XXIX

"Hew down the bridge, Sir Consul,
 With all the speed ye may ;
 I, with two more to help me, 235
 Will hold the foe in play.

In yon strait path a thousand
 May well be stopped by three.
Now who will stand on either hand,
 And keep the bridge with me?" 240

XXX

Then out spake Spurius Lartius —
 A Ramnian proud was he :
" Lo, I will stand at thy right hand,
 And keep the bridge with thee."
And out spake strong Herminius — 245
 Of Titian blood was he :
" I will abide on thy left side,
 And keep the bridge with thee."

XXXI

" Horatius," quoth the Consul,
 " As thou sayest, so let it be." 250
And straight against that great array Forth went the dauntless Three.
For Romans in Rome's quarrel
 Spared neither land nor gold,
Nor son nor wife, nor limb nor life, 255
 In the brave days of old.

XXXII

Then none was for a party ;
 Then all were for the State ;
Then the great man helped the poor,
 And the poor man loved the great ; 260
Then lands were fairly portioned ;
 Then spoils were fairly sold :
The Romans were like brothers
 In the brave days of old.

XXXIII

Now Roman is to Roman 265
 More hateful than a foe ;
 And the Tribunes beard the high,
 And the Fathers grind the low.
 As we wax hot in faction,
 In battle we wax cold ; 270
 Wherefore men fight not as they fought
 In the brave days of old.

XXXIV

Now while the Three were tightening
 Their harness on their backs,
 The Consul was the foremost man 275
 To take in hand an axe ;
 And Fathers mixed with Commons
 Seized hatchet, bar, and crow,
 And smote upon the planks above,
 And loosed the props below. 280

XXXV

Meanwhile the Tuscan army,
 Right glorious to behold,
 Came flashing back the noonday light,
 Rank behind rank, like surges bright
 Of a broad sea of gold. 285
 Four hundred trumpets sounded
 A peal of warlike glee,
 As that great host, with measured tread,
 And spears advanced and ensigns spread,
 Rolled slowly towards the bridge's head, 290
 Where stood the dauntless Three.

XXXVI

The Three stood calm and silent,
 And looked upon the foes,
 And a great shout of laughter
 From all the vanguard rose ; 295
 And forth three chiefs came spurring
 Before that deep array ;
 To earth they sprang, their swords they drew,
 And lifted high their shields, and flew
 To win the narrow way ; 300

XXXVII

Aunus from green Tifernum,
 Lord of the Hill of Vines ;
 And Seius, whose eight hundred slaves
 Sicken in Ilva's mines ;
 And Picus, long to Clusium 305
 Vassal in peace and war,
 Who led to fight his Umbrian powers
 From that grey crag where, girt with towers
 The fortress of Nequinum lowers
 O'er the pale waves of Nar. 310

XXXVIII

Stout Lartius hurled down Aunus
 Into the stream beneath ;
 Herminius struck at Seius,
 And clove him to the teeth ;
 At Picus brave Horatius 315
 Darted one fiery thrust,
 And the proud Umbrian's gilded arms
 Clashed in the bloody dust.

XXXIX

Then Ocnus of Falerii
 Rushed on the Roman Three; 320
 And Lausulus of Urgo,
 The rover of the sea;
 And Aruns of Volsinium,
 Who slew the great wild boar,
 The great wild boar that had his den 325
 Amidst the reeds of Cosa's fen,
 And wasted fields and slaughtered men
 Along Albinia's shore.

XL

Herminius smote down Aruns;
 Lartius laid Ocnus low; 330
 Right to the heart of Lausulus
 Horatius sent a blow.
 "Lie there," he cried, "fell pirate!
 No more, aghast and pale,
 From Ostia's walls the crowd shall mark 335
 The track of thy destroying bark.
 No more Campania's hinds shall fly
 To woods and caverns, when they spy
 Thy thrice accursed sail."

XLI

But now no sound of laughter 340
 Was heard among the foes;
 A wild and wrathful clamor
 From all the vanguard rose.
 Six spears' length from the entrance
 Halted that deep array, 345

And for a space no man came forth
 To win the narrow way.

XLII

But hark! the cry is "Astur!"
 And lo! the ranks divide,
 And the great Lord of Luna 350
 Comes with his stately stride.
 Upon his ample shoulders
 Clangs loud the fourfold shield,
 And in his hand he shakes the brand
 Which none but he can wield. 355

XLIII

He smiled on those bold Romans
 A smile serene and high;
 He eyed the flinching Tuscans,
 And scorn was in his eye.
 Quoth he, "The she-wolf's litter 360
 Stand savagely at bay;
 But will ye dare to follow,
 If Astur clears the way?"

XLIV

Then, whirling up his broadsword
 With both hands to the height, 365
 He rushed against Horatius,
 And smote with all his might.
 With shield and blade Horatius
 Right deftly turned the blow.
 The blow, though turned, came yet too nigh; 370
 It missed his helm, but gashed his thigh;
 The Tuscans raised a joyful cry
 To see the red blood flow.

Mingled of wrath and shame and dread, 400
 Along that glittering van.
 There lacked not men of prowess
 Nor men of lordly race ;
 For all Etruria's noblest
 Were round the fatal place. 405

XLIX

But all Etruria's noblest
 Felt their hearts sink to see
 On the earth the bloody corpses,
 In the path the dauntless Three ;
 And from the ghastly entrance 410
 Where those bold Romans stood
 All shrank, like boys who, unaware,
 Ranging the woods to start a hare,
 Come to the mouth of the dark lair
 Where, growling low, a fierce old bear 415
 Lies amidst bones and blood.

L

Was none who would be foremost
 To lead such dire attack ;
 But those behind cried " Forward ! " .
 And those before cried " Back ! " 420
 And backward now and forward
 Wavers the deep array ;
 And on the tossing sea of steel
 To and fro the standards reel,
 And the victorious trumpet-peal 425
 Dies fitfully away.

LI

Yet one man for one moment
 Stood out before the crowd ;

Well known was he to all the Three,
 And they gave him greeting loud: 430
 "Now welcome, welcome, Sextus!
 Now welcome to thy home!
 Why dost thou stay and turn away?
 Here lies the road to Rome."

LII

Thrice looked he at the city, 435
 Thrice looked he at the dead;
 And thrice came on in fury,
 And thrice turned back in dread,
 And, white with fear and hatred,
 Scowled at the narrow way, 440
 Where, wallowing in a pool of blood,
 The bravest Tuscans lay.

LIII

But meanwhile axe and lever
 Have manfully been plied,
 And now the bridge hangs tottering 445
 Above the boiling tide.
 "Come back, come back, Horatius!"
 Loud cried the Fathers all.
 "Back, Lartius! back, Herminius!
 Back, ere the ruin fall!" 450

LIV

Back darted Spurius Lartius, Herminius darted back;
 And, as they passed, beneath their feet
 They felt the timbers crack.
 But when they turned their faces, 455
 And on the farther shore

Saw brave Horatius stand alone,
They would have crossed once more.

LV

But with a crash like thunder
Fell every loosened beam, 460
And, like a dam, the mighty wreck
Lay right athwart the stream.
And a long shout of triumph
Rose from the walls of Rome,
As to the highest turret-tops 465
Was splashed the yellow foam.

LVI

And, like a horse unbroken
When first he feels the rein,
The furious river struggled hard,
And tossed his tawny mane, 470
And burst the curb and bounded,
Rejoicing to be free,
And, whirling down in fierce career
Battlement and plank and pier,
Rushed headlong to the sea. 475

LVII

Alone stood brave Horatius,
But constant still in mind,
Thrice thirty thousand foes before
And the broad flood behind.
"Down with him!" cried false Sextus, 480
With a smile on his pale face.
"Now yield thee," cried Lars Porsena,
"Now yield thee to our grace."

LXI

But fiercely ran the current, 510
 Swollen high by months of rain ;
 And fast his blood was flowing,
 And he was sore in pain,
 And heavy with his armor,
 And spent with changing blows ; 515
 And oft they thought him sinking,
 But still again he rose.

LXII

Never, I ween, did swimmer,
 In such an evil case,
 Struggle through such a raging flood 520
 Safe to the landing place ;
 But his limbs were borne up bravely
 By the brave heart within,
 And our good father Tiber
 Bare bravely up his chin. 525

LXIII

“Curse on him !” quoth false Sextus ;
 “Will not the villain drown ?
 But for this stay, ere close of day
 We should have sacked the town !”
 “Heaven help him !” quoth Lars Porsena, 530
 “ And bring him safe to shore ;
 For such a gallant feat of arms
 Was never seen before.”

LXIV

And now he feels the bottom ;
 Now on dry earth he stands ; 535

Now round him throught the Fathers
 To press his gory hands ;
 And now, with shouts and clapping
 And noise of weeping loud,
 He enters through the River-Gate, 540
 Borne by the joyous crowd.

LXV

They gave him of the corn-land,
 That was of public right,
 As much as two strong oxen
 Could plough from morn till night : 545
 And they made a molten image
 And set it up on high,
 And there it stands unto this day
 To witness if I lie.

LXVI

It stands in the Comitium, 550
 Plain for all folk to see,
 Horatius in his harness
 Halting upon one knee ;
 And underneath is written
 In letters all of gold 555
 How valiantly he kept the bridge
 In the brave days of old.

LXVII

And still his name sounds stirring
 Unto the men of Rome,
 As the trumpet-blast that cries to them 560
 To charge the Volscian home ;
 And wives still pray to Juno

For boys with hearts as bold
As his who kept the bridge so well
In the brave days of old. 565

LXVIII

And in the nights of winter,
When the cold north winds blow,
And the long howling of the wolves
Is heard amidst the snow ;
When round the lonely cottage 570
Roars loud the tempest's din,
And the good logs of Algidus Roar louder yet within ;

LXIX

When the oldest cask is opened,
And the largest lamp is lit ; 575
When the chestnuts glow in the embers,
And the kid turns on the spit ;
When young and old in circle
Around the firebrands close ;
When the girls are weaving baskets, 580
And the lads are shaping bows ;

LXX

When the goodman mends his armor,
And trims his helmet's plume ;
When the goodwife's shuttle merrily
Goes flashing through the loom ; 585
With weeping and with laughter
Still is the story told,
How well Horatius kept the bridge
In the brave days of old.

BATTLE OF THE LAKE REGILLUS

THE following poem is supposed to have been produced about ninety years after the lay of Horatius. Some persons mentioned in the lay of Horatius make their appearance again, and some appellations and epithets used in the lay of Horatius have been purposely repeated; for, 5 in an age of ballad poetry, it scarcely ever fails to happen that certain phrases come to be appropriated to certain men and things, and are regularly applied to those men and things by every minstrel. Thus we find, both in the Homeric poems and in Hesiod, βίη Ἡρακληΐη, περικλυτὸς 10
'Αμφιγυήεις, διάκτορος Ἀργειφόντης, ἐπτάτυλος Θήβη, Ἑλένης ἔνεκ' ἠϋκόμοιο. Thus, too, in our own national songs Douglas is almost always the doughty Douglas, England is merry England, all the gold is red, and all the ladies are gay.

The principal distinction between the lay of Horatius 15 and the lay of the Lake Regillus is that the former is meant to be purely Roman, while the latter, though national in its general spirit, has a slight tincture of Greek learning and of Greek superstition. The story of the Tarquins, as it has come down to us, appears to have 20 been compiled from the works of several popular poets; and one, at least, of those poets appears to have visited the Greek colonies in Italy, if not Greece itself, and to have had some acquaintance with the works of Homer and Herodotus. Many of the most striking adventures 25 of the house of Tarquin, before Lucretia makes her appearance, have a Greek character. The Tarquins themselves are represented as Corinthian nobles of the great house of the Bacchiadæ, driven from their country by the tyranny of that Cypselus the tale of whose strange escape Herodotus has related with incomparable simplicity and liveliness.¹ Livy and Dionysius tell us that, when Tarquin the Proud was asked what was the best mode of governing a conquered city, he replied only by beating down with his staff all the tallest poppies in his garden.² This is exactly what Herodotus, in the passage to which reference has already been made, relates of the counsel given to Periander, the son of Cypselus. The stratagem by which the town of Gabii is brought under the power of the Tarquins is, again, obviously copied from Herodotus.³ The embassy of the young Tarquins to the oracle at Delphi is just such a story as would be told by a poet whose head was full of the Greek mythology ; and the ambiguous answer returned by Apollo is in the exact style of the prophecies which, according to Herodotus, lured Cræsus to destruction. Then the character of the narrative changes. From the first mention of Lucretia to the retreat of Porsena nothing seems to be borrowed from foreign sources. The villainy of Sextus, the suicide of his victim, the revolution, the death of the sons of Brutus, the defence of the bridge, Mucius burning his hand,⁴ Clælia swimming through Tiber, seem to be all strictly Roman. But when we have done with the Tuscan war, and enter upon the war with the Latines, we are again struck by the Greek air of the story. The Battle of the

² Livy, i. 54. Dionysius, iv. 56.

³ Herodotus, iii. 154. Livy, i. 53.

⁴ M. de Pouilly attempted, a hundred and twenty years ago, to prove that the story of Mucius was of Greek origin ; but he was signally confuted by the Abbé Sallier. See the Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions, vi. 27. 66.

Lake Regillus is in all respects a Homeric battle, except that the combatants ride astride on their horses instead of driving chariots. The mass of fighting men is hardly mentioned. The leaders single each other out, and engage hand to hand. The great object of the warriors on both sides is, as in the Iliad, to obtain possession of the spoils and bodies of the slain ; and several circumstances are related which forcibly remind us of the great slaughter round the corpses of Sarpedon and Patroclus.

But there is one circumstance which deserves especial notice. Both the war of Troy and the war of Regillus were caused by the licentious passions of young princes, who were therefore peculiarly bound not to be sparing of their own persons in the day of battle. Now the conduct of Sextus at Regillus, as described by Livy, so exactly resembles that of Paris, as described at the beginning of the third book of the Iliad, that it is difficult to believe the resemblance accidental. Paris appears before the Trojan ranks, defying the bravest Greek to encounter him :

Τρωσιν μὲν προμάχιζεν Ἀλέξανδρος θεοειδῆς,
 . . . Ἀργείων προκαλίζετο πάντας ἀρίστους,
 ἀντίβιον μαχέσασθαι ἐν αἰνῇ δηϊοτήτι.

Livy introduces Sextus in a similar manner: "Feroce juvenem Tarquinius, ostentantem se in prima exsulum acie." Menelaus rushes to meet Paris. A Roman noble, eager for vengeance, spurs his horse towards Sextus. Both the guilty princes are instantly terror stricken:

Τὸν δ' ὡς οὖν ἐνόησεν Ἀλέξανδρος θεοειδῆς ἐν προμάχοισι φανέντα, κατεπλήγη φίλον ἦτορ· ἄψ δ' ἐτάρων εἰς ἔθνος ἐχάζετο κῆρ' ἀλεείνων.

"Tarquinius," says Livy, "retro in agmen suorum infenso cessit hosti." If this be a fortuitous coincidence, it is one of the most extraordinary in literature.

In the following poem, therefore, images and incidents have been borrowed, not merely without scruple, but on principle, from the incomparable battle-pieces of Homer.

5 The popular belief at Rome, from an early period, seems to have been that the event of the great day of Regillus was decided by supernatural agency. Castor and Pollux, it was said, had fought, armed and mounted, at the head of the legions of the commonwealth, and had 10 afterwards carried the news of the victory with incredible speed to the city. The well in the Forum at which they had alighted was pointed out. Near the well rose their ancient temple. A great festival was kept to their honor on the Ides of Quintilis, supposed to be the anni-
15 versary of the battle; and on that day sumptuous sacrifices were offered to them at the public charge. One spot on the margin of Lake Regillus was regarded during many ages with superstitious awe. A mark, resembling in shape a horse's hoof, was discernible in the volcanic 20 rock; and this mark was believed to have been made by one of the celestial chargers.

How the legend originated cannot now be ascertained, but we may easily imagine several ways in which it might have originated; nor is it at all necessary to suppose,
25 with Julius Frontinus, that two young men were dressed up by the Dictator to personate the sons of Leda. It is probable that Livy is correct when he says that the Roman general, in the hour of peril, vowed a temple to Castor. If so, nothing could be more natural than that 30 the multitude should ascribe the victory to the favor of the Twin Gods. When such was the prevailing sentiment, any man who chose to declare that, in the midst of the confusion and slaughter, he had seen two godlike forms on white horses scattering the Latines would find ready credence. We know, indeed, that in modern times a very similar story actually found credence among a people much more civilized than the Romans of the fifth century before Christ. A chaplain of Cortes, writing about thirty years after the conquest of Mexico, in an age of printing presses, libraries, universities, scholars, logicians, jurists, and statesmen, had the face to assert that, in one engagement against the Indians, Saint James had appeared on a gray horse at the head of the Castilian adventurers. Many of those adventurers were living when this lie was printed. One of them, honest Bernal Diaz, wrote an account of the expedition. He had the evidence of his own senses against the legend; but he seems to have distrusted even the evidence of his own senses. He says that he was in the battle, and that he saw a gray horse with a man on his back, but that the man was, to his thinking, Francesco de Morla, and not the ever-blessed apostle Saint James. "Nevertheless," Bernal adds, "it may be that the person on the gray horse was the glorious apostle Saint James, and that I, sinner that I am, was unworthy to see him." The Romans of the age of Cincinnatus were probably quite as credulous as the Spanish subjects of Charles the Fifth. It is therefore conceivable that the appearance of Castor and Pollux may have become an article of faith before the generation which had fought at Regillus had passed away. Nor could anything be more natural than that the poets of the next age should embellish this story, and make the celestial horsemen bear the tidings of victory to Rome.

Many years after the temple of the Twin Gods had been built in the Forum, an important addition was made to the ceremonial by which the state annually testified its gratitude for their protection. Quintus Fabius and Publius Decius were elected Censors at a momentous crisis.

It had become absolutely necessary that the classification of the citizens should be revised. On that classification depended the distribution of political power. Party-spirit ran high; and the republic seemed to be in danger of falling under the dominion either of a narrow oligarchy or of an ignorant and headstrong rabble. Under such circumstances, the most illustrious patrician and the most illustrious plebeian of the age were entrusted with the office of arbitrating between the angry factions; and they performed their arduous task to the satisfaction of all honest and reasonable men.

One of their reforms was a remodelling of the equestrian order; and, having effected this reform, they determined to give to their work a sanction derived from religion. In the chivalrous societies of modern times, societies which have much more than may at first sight appear in common with the equestrian order of Rome, it has been usual to invoke the special protection of some Saint, and to observe his day with peculiar solemnity. Thus the Companions of the Garter wear the image of Saint George depending from their collars, and meet on great occasions in Saint George's Chapel. Thus, when Lewis the Fourteenth instituted a new order of chivalry for the rewarding of military merit, he commended it to the favor of his own glorified ancestor and patron, and decreed that all the members of the fraternity should meet at the royal palace on the feast of Saint Lewis, should attend the king to chapel, should hear mass, and should subsequently hold their great annual assembly. There is a considerable resemblance between this rule of the order of Saint Lewis and the rule which Fabius and Decius made respecting the Roman Knights. It was ordained that a grand muster and inspection of the equestrian body should be part of the ceremonial performed, on the anniversary of the battle of Regillus, in honor of Castor and Pollux, the two equestrian Gods. All the Knights, clad in purple and crowned with olive, were to meet at a temple of Mars in the suburbs. Thence they were to ride in state to the Forum, where the temple of the Twins stood. This pagan- 5 eant was, during several centuries, considered as one of the most splendid sights of Rome. In the time of Dionysius the cavalcade sometimes consisted of five thousand horsemen, all persons of fair repute and easy fortune.¹

There can be no doubt that the Censors who instituted 10 this august ceremony acted in concert with the Pontiffs, to whom, by the constitution of Rome, the superintendence of the public worship belonged; and it is probable that those high religious functionaries were, as usual, fortunate enough to find in their books or traditions some 15 warrant for the innovation.

The following poem is supposed to have been made for this great occasion. Songs, we know, were chanted at the religious festivals of Rome from an early period, — indeed from so early a period that some of the sacred 20 verses were popularly ascribed to Numa, and were utterly unintelligible in the age of Augustus. In the Second Punic War a great feast was held in honor of Juno, and a song was sung in her praise. This song was extant when Livy wrote; and, though exceedingly rugged and 25 uncouth, seemed to him not wholly destitute of merit.² A song, as we learn from Horace,³ was part of the established ritual at the great Secular Jubilee. It is therefore likely that the Censors and Pontiffs, when they had resolved to add a grand procession of Knights to the other solemnities annually performed on the Ides of Quintilis, would call in the aid of a poet. Such a poet would naturally take for his subject the battle of Regillus, the appearance of the Twin Gods, and the institution of their festival. He would find abundant materials in the ballads of his predecessors ; and he would make free use of the scanty stock of Greek learning which he had himself acquired. He would probably introduce some wise and holy Pontiff enjoining the magnificent ceremonial, which after a long interval had at length been adopted. If the poem succeeded, many persons would commit it to memory. Parts of it would be sung to the pipe at banquets. It would be peculiarly interesting to the great Posthumian House, which numbered among its many images that of the Dictator Aulus, the hero of Regillus. The orator who, in the following generation, pronounced the funeral panegyric over the remains of Lucius Posthumius Megellus, thrice Consul, would borrow largely from the lay ; and thus some passages, much disfigured, would probably find their way into the chronicles which were afterwards in the hands of Dionysius and Livy.

Antiquaries differ widely as to the situation of the field of battle. The opinion of those who suppose that the armies met near Cornufelle, between Frascati and the Monte Porzio, is at least plausible, and has been followed in the poem.

As to the details of the battle, it has not been thought desirable to adhere minutely to the accounts which have come down to us. Those accounts, indeed, differ widely from each other, and in all probability differ as widely from the ancient poem from which they were originally derived.

It is unnecessary to point out the obvious imitations of the Iliad, which have been purposely introduced.

THE BATTLE OF THE LAKE REGILLUS

A LAY SUNG AT THE FEAST OF CASTOR AND POLLUX, ON THE IDES OF QUINTILIS, IN THE YEAR OF THE CITY CCCCLI.

I

Ho, trumpets, sound a war-note!
Ho, lictors, clear the way!
The Knights will ride in all their pride
Along the streets to-day.
To-day the doors and windows 5
Are hung with garlands all,
From Castor in the Forum
To Mars without the wall.
Each Knight is robed in purple,
With olive each is crowned; 10
A gallant war-horse under each
Paws haughtily the ground.
While flows the Yellow River,
While stands the Sacred Hill,
The proud Ides of Quintilis 15
Shall have such honor still.
Gay are the Martian Kalends,
December's Nones are gay;
But the proud Ides, when the squadron rides,
Shall be Rome's whitest day. 20

II

Unto the Great Twin Brethren
We keep this solemn feast.
Swift, swift, the Great Twin Brethren
Came spurring from the east.

They came o'er wild Parthenius 25
 Tossing in waves of pine,
 O'er Cirrha's dome, o'er Adria's foam,
 O'er purple Apennine ;
 From where with flutes and dances
 Their ancient mansion rings 30
 In lordly Lacedæmon,
 The city of two kings,
 To where, by Lake Regillus,
 Under the Porcian height,
 All in the lands of Tusculum, 35
 Was fought the glorious fight.

III

Now on the place of slaughter
 Are cots and sheepfolds seen,
 And rows of vines and fields of wheat
 And apple-orchards green ; 40
 The swine crush the big acorns
 That fall from Corne's oaks ;
 Upon the turf by the Fair Fount
 The reaper's pottage smokes.
 The fisher baits his angle, 45
 The hunter twangs his bow ;
 Little they think on those strong limbs
 That moulder deep below.
 Little they think how sternly
 That day the trumpets pealed ; 50
 How in the slippery swamp of blood
 Warrior and war-horse reeled ;
 How wolves came with fierce gallop,
 And crows on eager wings,
 To tear the flesh of captains, 55
 And peck the eyes of kings ;

How thick the dead lay scattered
 Under the Porcian height ;
 How through the gates of Tusculum
 Raved the wild stream of flight ; 60
 And how the Lake Regillus
 Bubbled with crimson foam,
 What time the Thirty Cities
 Came forth to war with Rome.

IV

But, Roman, when thou standest 65
 Upon that holy ground,
 Look thou with heed on the dark rock
 That girds the dark lake round ;
 So shalt thou see a hoof-mark
 Stamped deep into the flint ; 70
 It was no hoof of mortal steed
 That made so strange a dint.
 There to the Great Twin Brethren
 Vow thou thy vows, and pray
 That they, in tempest and in fight, 75
 Will keep thy head alway.

v

Since last the Great Twin Brethren
 Of mortal eyes were seen,
 Have years gone by an hundred
 And fourscore and thirteen. 80
 That summer a Virginius
 Was Consul first in place ;
 The second was stout Aulus,
 Of the Posthumian race.
 The Herald of the Latines 85
 From Gabii came in state ;

The Herald of the Latines
 Passed through Rome's Eastern Gate ;
 The Herald of the Latines
 Did in our Forum stand, 90
 And there he did his office,
 A sceptre in his hand :

VI

"Hear, Senators and people
 Of the good town of Rome,
 The Thirty Cities charge you 95
 To bring the Tarquins home ;
 And if ye still be stubborn
 To work the Tarquins wrong,
 The Thirty Cities warn you,
 Look that your walls be strong." 100

VII

Then spake the Consul Aulus —
 He spake a bitter jest —
 "Once the jays sent a message
 Unto the eagle's nest :
 'Now yield thou up thine eyrie 105
 Unto the carrion-kite,
 Or come forth valiantly and face
 The jays in deadly fight.'
 Forth looked in wrath the eagle ;
 And carrion-kite and jay, 110
 Soon as they saw his beak and claw,
 Fled screaming far away."

VIII

The Herald of the Latines
 Hath hied him back in state ;

The Fathers of the City 115
 Are met in high debate.
 Then spake the elder Consul,
 An ancient man and wise :
 "Now hearken, Conscript Fathers,
 To that which I advise. 120
 In seasons of great peril
 'Tis good that one bear sway ;
 Then choose we a Dictator,
 Whom all men shall obey.
 Camerium knows how deeply 125
 The sword of Aulus bites,
 And all our city calls him
 The man of seventy fights.
 Then let him be Dictator
 For six months and no more, 130
 And have a Master of the Knights,
 And axes twenty-four."

IX

So Aulus was Dictator,
 The man of seventy fights ;
 He made Æbutius Elva 135
 His Master of the Knights.
 On the third morn thereafter,
 At dawning of the day,
 Did Aulus and Æbutius
 Set forth with their array. 140
 Sempronius Atratinus
 Was left in charge at home
 With boys and with gray-headed men
 To keep the walls of Rome.
 Hard by the Lake Regillus 145
 Our camp was pitched at night ;

Eastward a mile the Latines lay,
 Under the Porcian height.
 Far over hill and valley
 Their mighty host was spread, 150
 And with their thousand watch-fires
 The midnight sky was red.

x

Up rose the golden morning
 Over the Porcian height,
 The proud Ides of Quintilis 155
 Marked evermore with white.
 Not without secret trouble
 Our bravest saw the foes ;
 For girt by threescore thousand spears
 The thirty standards rose. 160
 From every warlike city
 That boasts the Latian name,
 Foredoomed to dogs and vultures,
 That gallant army came :
 From Setia's purple vineyards, 165
 From Norba's ancient wall,
 From the white streets of Tusculum,
 The proudest town of all ;
 From where the Witch's Fortress
 O'erhangs the dark-blue seas ; 170
 From the still glassy lake that sleeps
 Beneath Aricia's trees —
 Those trees in whose dim shadow
 The ghastly priest doth reign,
 The priest who slew the slayer, 175
 And shall himself be slain ;
 From the drear banks of Ufens,
 Where flights of marsh-fowl play,

And buffaloes lie wallowing
 Through the hot summer's day; 180
 From the gigantic watch-towers,
 No work of earthly men,
 Whence Cora's sentinels o'erlook
 The never-ending fen;
 From the Laurentian jungle, 185
 The wild hog's reedy home;
 From the green steeps whence Anio leaps
 In floods of snow-white foam.

XI

Aricia, Cora, Norba,
 Velitræ, with the might 190
 Of Setia and of Tusculum,
 Were marshalled on the right.
 Their leader was Mamilius,
 Prince of the Latian name;
 Upon his head a helmet 195
 Of red gold shone like flame;
 High on a gallant charger
 Of dark-gray hue he rode;
 Over his gilded armor
 A vest of purple flowed, 200
 Woven in the land of sunrise
 By Syria's dark-browed daughters,
 And by the sails of Carthage brought Far o'er the southern waters.

XII

Lavinium and Laurentum 205
 Had on the left their post,
 With all the banners of the marsh
 And banners of the coast.

Though white as Mount Soracte,
When winter nights are long,
His beard flowed down o'er mail and belt,
His heart and hand were strong ;
Under his hoary eyebrows 245
Still flashed forth quenchless rage,
And, if the lance shook in his gripe,
'T was more with hate than age.
Close at his side was Titus
On an Apulian steed — 250
Titus, the youngest Tarquin,
Too good for such a breed.

XIV

Now on each side the leaders
Give signal for the charge ;
And on each side the footmen 255
Strode on with lance and targe ;
And on each side the horsemen
Struck their spurs deep in gore,
And front to front the armies
Met with a mighty roar ; 260
And under that great battle
The earth with blood was red ;
And, like the Pomptine fog at morn,
The dust hung overhead ;
And louder still and louder 265
Rose from the darkened field
The braying of the war-horns,
The clang of sword and shield,
The rush of squadrons sweeping
Like whirlwinds o'er the plain, 270
The shouting of the slayers
And screeching of the slain.

Gave Tubero of Norba
 To feed the Porcian kites.
 Next under those red horse-hoofs 305
 Flaccus of Setia lay;
 Better had he been pruning
 Among his elms that day.
 Mamilius saw the slaughter,
 And tossed his golden crest, 310
 And towards the Master of the Knights
 Through the thick battle pressed.
 Æbutius smote Mamilius
 So fiercely on the shield
 That the great lord of Tusculum 315
 Well nigh rolled on the field.
 Mamilius smote Æbutius,
 With a good aim and true,
 Just where the neck and shoulder join,
 And pierced him through and through; 320
 And brave Æbutius Elva
 Fell swooning to the ground,
 But a thick wall of bucklers
 Encompassed him around.
 His clients from the battle 325
 Bare him some little space,
 And filled a helm from the dark lake,
 And bathed his brow and face;
 And when at last he opened
 His swimming eyes to light, 330
 Men say the earliest word he spake
 Was, "Friends, how goes the fight?"

XVII

But meanwhile in the centre
 Great deeds of arms were wrought;

There Aulus the Dictator 335
 And there Valerius fought.
 Aulus with his good broadsword
 A bloody passage cleared
 To where, amidst the thickest foes,
 He saw the long white beard. 340
 Flat lighted that good broadsword
 Upon proud Tarquin's head.
 He dropped the lance, he dropped the reins ;
 He fell as fall the dead.
 Down Aulus springs to slay him, 345
 With eyes like coals of fire ;
 But faster Titus hath sprung down,
 And hath bestrode his sire.
 Latian captains, Roman knights,
 Fast down to earth they spring, 350
 And hand to hand they fight on foot
 Around the ancient king.
 First Titus gave tall Cæso
 A death wound in the face ;
 Tall Cæso was the bravest man 355
 Of the brave Fabian race ;
 Aulus slew Rex of Gabii,
 The priest of Juno's shrine ;
 Valerius smote down Julius,
 Of Rome's great Julian line — 360
 Julius, who left his mansion
 High on the Velian hill,
 And through all turns of weal and woe
 Followed proud Tarquin still.
 Now right across proud Tarquin 365
 A corpse was Julius laid ;
 And Titus groaned with rage and grief,
 And at Valerius made.

Valerius struck at Titus
 And lopped off half his crest ; 370
 But Titus stabbed Valerius
 A span deep in the breast.
 Like a mast snapped by the tempest,
 Valerius reeled and fell.
 Ah! woe is me for the good house 375
 That loves the people well !
 Then shouted loud the Latines,
 And with one rush they bore
 The struggling Romans backward
 Three lances' length and more ; 380
 And up they took proud Tarquin
 And laid him on a shield,
 And four strong yeomen bare him,
 Still senseless, from the field.

XVIII

But fiercer grew the fighting 385
 Around Valerius dead ;
 For Titus dragged him by the foot,
 And Aulus by the head.
 "On, Latines, on!" quoth Titus,
 "See how the rebels fly!" 390
 "Romans, stand firm!" quoth Aulus,
 "And win this fight or die !
 They must not give Valerius
 To raven and to kite ;
 For aye Valerius loathed the wrong, 395
 And aye upheld the right ;
 And for your wives and babies
 In the front rank he fell.
 Now play the men for the good house
 That loves the people well !" 400

XIX

Then tenfold round the body
The roar of battle rose,
Like the roar of a burning forest
When a strong north wind blows.
Now backward and now forward 405
Rocked furiously the fray,
Till none could see Valerius,
And none wist where he lay.
For shivered arms and ensigns
Were heaped there in a mound, 410
And corpses stiff, and dying men
That writhed and gnawed the ground;
And wounded horses kicking
And snorting purple foam;
Right well did such a couch befit 415
A Consular of Rome.

XX

But north looked the Dictator;
North looked he long and hard,
And spake to Caius Cossus,
The Captain of his Guard: 420
"Caius, of all the Romans
Thou hast the keenest sight;
Say, what through yonder storm of dust
Comes from the Latian right?"

XXI

Then answered Caius Cossus: 425
"I see an evil sight;
The banner of proud Tusculum
Comes from the Latian right.

I see the plumed horsemen ;
 And far before the rest 430
 I see the dark-gray charger,
 I see the purple vest,
 I see the golden helmet
 That shines far off like flame ;
 So ever rides Mamilius, 435
 Prince of the Latian name."

XXII

"Now hearken, Caius Cossus ;
 Spring on thy horse's back ;
 Ride as the wolves of Apennine
 Were all upon thy track ; 440
 Haste to our southward battle,
 And never draw thy rein
 Until thou find Herminius,
 And bid him come amain."

XXIII

So Aulus spake, and turned him 445
 Again to that fierce strife ;
 And Caius Cossus mounted,
 And rode for death and life.
 Loud clanged beneath his horse-hoofs
 The helmets of the dead, 450
 And many a curdling pool of blood
 Splashed him from heel to head.
 So came he far to southward,
 Where fought the Roman host
 Against the banners of the marsh 455
 And banners of the coast.
 Like corn before the sickle
 The stout Lavinians fell

Beneath the edge of the true sword
That kept the bridge so well. 460

XXIV

“ Herminius, Aulus greets thee ;
He bids thee come with speed
To help our central battle,
For sore is there our need.
There was the youngest Tarquin, 465
And there the Crest of Flame,
The Tusculan Mamilius,
Prince of the Latian name.
Valerius hath fallen fighting
In front of our array, 470
And Aulus of the seventy fields Alone upholds the day.”

XXV

Herminius beat his bosom,
But never a word he spake.
He clapped his hand on Auster's mane, 475
He gave the reins a shake ;
Away, away, went Auster
Like an arrow from the bow ;
Black Auster was the fleetest steed
From Aufidus to Po. 480

XXVI

Right glad were all the Romans
Who, in that hour of dread,
Against great odds bare up the war
Around Valerius dead,
When from the south the cheering 485
Rose with a mighty swell :

“ Herminius comes, Herminius,
Who kept the bridge so well!”

XXVII

Mamilius spied Herminius,
And dashed across the way: 490
“ Herminius, I have sought thee
Through many a bloody day.
One of us two, Herminius,
Shall never more go home.
I will lay on for Tusculum, 495
And lay thou on for Rome!”

XXVIII

All round them paused the battle,
While met in mortal fray
The Roman and the Tusculan,
The horses black and gray. 500
Herminius smote Mamilius
Through breastplate and through breast,
And fast flowed out the purple blood
Over the purple vest.
Mamilius smote Herminius 505
Through head-piece and through head;
And side by side those chiefs of pride
Together fell down dead.
Down fell they dead together
In a great lake of gore; 510
And still stood all who saw them fall
While men might count a score.

XXIX

Fast, fast, with heels wild spurning,
The dark-gray charger fled:

He burst through ranks of fighting men, 515
 He sprang o'er heaps of dead.
 His bridle far outstreaming,
 His flanks all blood and foam,
 He sought the southern mountains,
 The mountains of his home. 520
 The pass was steep and rugged,
 The wolves they howled and whined ;
 But he ran like a whirlwind up the pass,
 And he left the wolves behind.
 Through many a startled hamlet 525
 Thundered his flying feet ;
 He rushed through the gate of Tusculum,
 He rushed up the long white street ;
 He rushed by tower and temple,
 And paused not from his race 530
 Till he stood before his master's door
 In the stately market-place.
 And straightway round him gathered
 A pale and trembling crowd ;
 And, when they knew him, cries of rage 535
 Brake forth, and wailing loud ;
 And women rent their tresses
 For their great prince's fall ;
 And old men girt on their old swords,
 And went to man the wall. 540

XXX

But like a graven image
 Black Auster kept his place,
 And ever wistfully he looked Into his master's face.
 The raven mane that daily, 545
 With pats and fond caresses,

The young Herminia washed and combed,
 And twined in even tresses,
 And decked with colored ribbons
 From her own gay attire, 550
 Hung sadly o'er her father's corpse
 In carnage and in mire.
 Forth with a shout sprang Titus
 And seized black Auster's rein.
 Then Aulus sware a fearful oath, 555
 And ran at him amain :
 "The furies of thy brother
 With me and mine abide,
 If one of your accursed house
 Upon black Auster ride!" 560
 As on an Alpine watch-tower
 From heaven comes down the flame,
 Full on the neck of Titus
 The blade of Aulus came ;
 And out the red blood spouted 565
 In a wide arch and tall,
 As spouts a fountain in the court
 Of some rich Capuan's hall.
 The knees of all the Latines
 Were loosened with dismay 570
 When dead, on dead Herminius,
 The bravest Tarquin lay.

XXXI

And Aulus the Dictator
 Stroked Auster's raven mane ;
 With heed he looked unto the girths, 575
 With heed unto the rein :
 "Now bear me well, black Auster,
 Into yon thick array,

And thou and I will have revenge
 For thy good lord this day." 580

XXXII

So spake he, and was buckling
 Tighter black Auster's band,
 When he was aware of a princely pair
 That rode at his right hand.
 So like they were, no mortal 585
 Might one from other know;
 White as snow their armor was,
 Their steeds were white as snow.
 Never on earthly anvil
 Did such rare armor gleam, 590
 And never did such gallant steeds
 Drink of an earthly stream.

XXXIII

And all who saw them trembled,
 And pale grew every cheek;
 And Aulus the Dictator 595
 Scarce gathered voice to speak:
 "Say by what name men call you;
 What city is your home?
 And wherefore ride ye in such guise
 Before the ranks of Rome?" 600

XXXIV

"By many names men call us,
 In many lands we dwell:
 Well Samothracia knows us,
 Cyrene knows us well;
 Our house in gay Tarentum 605
 Is hung each morn with flowers;

High o'er the masts of Syracuse
 Our marble portal towers ;
 But by the proud Eurotas
 Is our dear native home ; 610
 And for the right we come to fight
 Before the ranks of Rome."

XXXV

So answered those strange horsemen,
 And each couched low his spear ;
 And forthwith all the ranks of Rome 615
 Were bold and of good cheer ;
 And on the thirty armies
 Came wonder and affright,
 And Ardea wavered on the left,
 And Cora on the right. 620
 "Rome to the charge !" cried Aulus ;
 "The foe begins to yield !
 Charge for the hearth of Vesta !
 Charge for the Golden Shield !
 Let no man stop to plunder, 625
 But slay, and slay, and slay ;
 The Gods who live forever
 Are on our side to-day."

XXXVI

Then the fierce trumpet-flourish
 From earth to heaven arose. 630
 The kites know well the long stern swell
 That bids the Romans close.
 Then the good sword of Aulus
 Was lifted up to slay ;
 Then like a crag down Apennine 635
 Rushed Auster through the fray.

But under those strange horsemen
 Still thicker lay the slain;
 And after those strange horses
 Black Auster toiled in vain. 640
 Behind them Rome's long battle
 Came rolling on the foe,
 Ensigns dancing wild above,
 Blades all in line below.
 So comes the Po in flood-time 645
 Upon the Celtic plain;
 So comes the squall, blacker than night,
 Upon the Adrian main.
 Now, by our Sire Quirinus,
 It was a goodly sight 650
 To see the thirty standards
 Swept down the tide of flight.
 So flies the spray of Adria
 When the black squall doth blow;
 So corn-sheaves in the flood-time 655
 Spin down the whirling Po.
 False Sextus to the mountains
 Turned first his horse's head;
 And fast fled Ferentinum,
 And fast Lanuvium fled. 660
 The horsemen of Nomentum
 Spurred hard out of the fray;
 The footmen of Velitræ
 Threw shield and spear away;
 And underfoot was trampled, 665
 Amidst the mud and gore,
 The banner of proud Tusculum,
 That never stooped before;
 And down went Flavius Faustus,
 Who led his stately ranks 670

From where the apple-blossoms wave
 On Anio's echoing banks ;
 And Tullus of Arpinum,
 Chief of the Volscian aids,
 And Metius with the long fair curls, 675
 The love of Anxur's maids,
 And the white head of Vulso,
 The great Arician seer,
 And Nepos of Laurentum,
 The hunter of the deer; 680
 And in the back false Sextus
 Felt the good Roman steel,
 And wriggling in the dust he died
 Like a worm beneath the wheel ;
 And fliers and pursuers 685
 Were mingled in a mass ;
 And far away the battle
 Went roaring through the pass.

XXXVII

Sempronius Atratinus
 Sat in the Eastern Gate ; 690
 Beside him were three Fathers,
 Each in his chair of state —
 Fabius, whose nine stout grandsons
 That day were in the field,
 And Manlius, eldest of the Twelve 695
 Who kept the Golden Shield,
 And Sergius, the High Pontiff,
 For wisdom far renowned ;
 In all Etruria's colleges
 Was no such Pontiff found. 700
 And all around the portal,
 And high above the wall,

Stood a great throng of people,
 But sad and silent all ;
 Young lads and stooping elders 705
 That might not bear the mail,
 Matrons with lips that quivered,
 And maids with faces pale.
 Since the first gleam of daylight,
 Sempronius had not ceased 710
 To listen for the rushing
 Of horse-hoofs from the east.
 The mist of eve was rising,
 The sun was hastening down,
 When he was aware of a princely pair 715
 Fast pricking towards the town.
 So like they were, man never Saw twins so like before ;
 Red with gore their armor was,
 Their steeds were red with gore. 720

XXXVIII

" Hail to the great Asylum !
 Hail to the hill-tops seven !
 Hail to the fire that burns for aye,
 And the shield that fell from heaven !
 This day, by Lake Regillus, 725
 Under the Porcian height,
 All in the lands of Tusculum,
 Was fought a glorious fight.
 To-morrow your Dictator
 Shall bring in triumph home 730
 The spoils of thirty cities
 To deck the shrines of Rome ! "

XXXIX

Then burst from that great concourse
A shout that shook the towers,
And some ran north, and some ran south, 735
Crying, "The day is ours!"
But on rode the strange horsemen
With slow and lordly pace,
And none who saw their bearing
Durst ask their name or race. 740
On rode they to the Forum,
While laurel-boughs and flowers,
From housetops and from windows,
Fell on their crests in showers.
When they drew nigh to Vesta, 745
They vaulted down amain,
And washed their horses in the well
That springs by Vesta's fane.
And straight again they mounted,
And rode to Vesta's door; 750
Then, like a blast, away they passed,
And no man saw them more.

XL

And all the people trembled,
And pale grew every cheek;
And Sergius the High Pontiff 755
Alone found voice to speak:
"The Gods who live forever
Have fought for Rome to-day!
These be the Great Twin Brethren
To whom the Dorians pray. 760
Back comes the Chief in triumph
Who in the hour of fight

Hath seen the Great Twin Brethren
 In harness on his right.
 Safe comes the ship to haven, 765
 Through billows and through gales,
 If once the Great Twin Brethren
 Sit shining on the sails.
 Wherefore they washed their horses
 In Vesta's holy well, 770
 Wherefore they rode to Vesta's door,
 I know, but may not tell.
 Here, hard by Vesta's Temple,
 Build we a stately dome
 Unto the Great Twin Brethren 775
 Who fought so well for Rome.
 And when the months returning
 Bring back this day of fight,
 The proud Ides of Quintilis,
 Marked evermore with white, 780
 Unto the Great Twin Brethren
 Let all the people throng
 With chaplets and with offerings,
 With music and with song ;
 And let the doors and windows 785
 Be hung with garlands all,
 And let the Knights be summoned
 To Mars without the wall ;
 Thence let them ride in purple
 With joyous trumpet-sound, 790
 Each mounted on his war-horse,
 And each with olive crowned ;
 And pass in solemn order
 Before the sacred dome
 Where dwell the Great Twin Brethren 795
 Who fought so well for Rome !”

VIRGINIA

A COLLECTION consisting exclusively of war-songs would give an imperfect, or rather an erroneous, notion of the spirit of the old Latin ballads. The Patricians, during more than a century after the expulsion of the Kings, held all the high military commands. A Plebeian, even 5 though, like Lucius Siccus, he were distinguished by his valor and knowledge of war, could serve only in subordinate posts. A minstrel, therefore, who wished to celebrate the early triumphs of his country, could hardly take any but Patricians for his heroes. The warriors who are 10 mentioned in the two preceding lays, Horatius, Lartius, Herminius, Aulus Posthumius, Æbutius Elva, Sempronius Atratinus, Valerius Poplicola, were all members of the dominant order ; and a poet who was singing their praises, whatever his own political opinions might be, 15 would naturally abstain from insulting the class to which they belonged, and from reflecting on the system which had placed such men at the head of the legions of the Commonwealth.

But there was a class of compositions in which the 20 great families were by no means so courteously treated. No parts of early Roman history are richer with poetical coloring than those which relate to the long contest between the privileged houses and the commonalty. The population of Rome was, from a very early period, divided 25 into hereditary castes, which, indeed, readily united to repel foreign enemies, but which regarded each other, during many years, with bitter animosity. Between those castes there was a barrier hardly less strong than that which, at Venice, parted the members of the Great Council from their countrymen. In some respects, indeed, the line which separated an Icilius or a Duilius from a Posthumius or a Fabius was even more deeply marked than that which separated the rower of a gondola from a Contarini or a Morosini. At Venice the distinction was merely civil. At Rome it was both civil and religious.

10 Among the grievances under which the Plebeians suffered, three were felt as peculiarly severe. They were excluded from the highest magistracies; they were excluded from all share in the public lands; and they were ground down to the dust by partial and barbarous legis-

15 lation touching pecuniary contracts. The ruling class in Rome was a moneyed class; and it made and administered the laws with a view solely to its own interest. Thus the relation between lender and borrower was mixed up with the relation between sovereign and

20 subject. The great men held a large portion of the community in dependence by means of advances at enormous usury. The law of debt, framed by creditors and for the protection of creditors, was the most horrible that has ever been known among men. The liberty and

25 even the life of the insolvent were at the mercy of the Patrician money-lenders. Children often became slaves in consequence of the misfortunes of their parents. The debtor was imprisoned, not in a public gaol under the care of impartial public functionaries, but in a private work-

30 house belonging to the creditor. Frightful stories were told respecting these dungeons. It was said that torture and brutal violation were common; that tight stocks, heavy chains, scanty measures of food, were used to punish wretches guilty of nothing but poverty; and that brave soldiers, whose breasts were covered with honorable scars, were often marked still more deeply on the back by the scourges of high-born usurers.

The Plebeians were, however, not wholly without constitutional rights. From an early period they had been 5 admitted to some share of political power. They were enrolled each in his century, and were allowed a share, considerable though not proportioned to their numerical strength, in the disposal of those high dignities from which they were themselves excluded. Thus their position bore 10 some resemblance to that of the Irish Catholics during the interval between the year 1792 and the year 1829. The Plebeians had also the privilege of annually appointing officers, named Tribunes, who had no active share in the government of the Commonwealth, but who, by degrees, 15 acquired a power formidable even to the ablest and most resolute Consuls and Dictators. The person of the Tribune was inviolable; and, though he could directly effect little, he could obstruct everything.

During more than a century after the institution of the 20 Tribuneship, the Commons struggled manfully for the removal of the grievances under which they labored; and, in spite of many checks and reverses, succeeded in wringing concession after concession from the stubborn aristocracy. At length, in the year of the city 378, both parties mustered 25 their whole strength for their last and most desperate conflict. The popular and active Tribune, Caius Licinius, proposed the three memorable laws which are called by his name, and which were intended to redress the three great evils of which the Plebeians complained. He was sup- 30 ported with eminent ability and firmness by his colleague, Lucius Sextius. The struggle appears to have been the fiercest that ever in any community terminated without an appeal to arms. If such a contest had raged in any Greek city, the streets would have run with blood. But, even in the paroxysms of faction, the Roman retained his gravity, his respect for law, and his tenderness for the lives of his fellow-citizens. Year after year Licinius and Sextius were re-elected Tribunes. Year after year, if the narrative which has come down to us is to be trusted, they continued to exert, to the full extent, their power of stopping the whole machine of government. No curule magistrates could be chosen ; no military muster could be held. We know too little of the state of Rome in those days to be able to conjecture how, during that long anarchy, the peace was kept and ordinary justice administered between man and man. The animosity of both parties rose to the greatest height. The excitement, we may well suppose, would have been peculiarly intense at the annual election of Tribunes. On such occasions there can be little doubt that the great families did all that could be done, by threats and caresses, to break the union of the Plebeians. That union, however, proved indissoluble. At length the good cause triumphed. The Licinian laws were carried. Lucius Sextius was the first Plebeian Consul, Caius Licinius the third.

The results of this great change were singularly happy and glorious. Two centuries of prosperity, harmony, and victory followed the reconciliation of the orders. Men who remembered Rome engaged in waging petty wars almost within sight of the Capitol lived to see her the mistress of Italy. While the disabilities of the Plebeians continued, she was scarcely able to maintain her ground against the Volscians and Hernicans. When those disabilities were removed, she rapidly became more than a match for Carthage and Macedon.

During the great Licinian contest the Plebeian poets were, doubtless, not silent. Even in modern times songs have been by no means without influence on public affairs ; and we may therefore infer that, in a society where printing was unknown and where books were rare, a pathetic or humorous party-ballad must have produced effects such as we can but faintly conceive. It is certain that satirical poems were common at Rome from a very early period. The rustics, who lived at a distance from the seat of government, and took little part in the strife of factions, gave vent to their petty local animosities in coarse Fescennine verse. The lampoons of the city were doubtless of a higher order ; and their sting was early felt by the nobility. For in the Twelve Tables, long before the time of the Licinian laws, a severe punishment was denounced against the citizen who should compose or recite verses reflecting on another.¹ Satire is, indeed, the only sort of composition in which the Latin poets whose works have come down to us were not mere imitators of foreign models ; and it is therefore the only sort of composition in which they have never been rivalled. It was not, like their tragedy, their comedy, their epic and lyric poetry, a hothouse plant which, in return for assiduous and skilful culture, gave only scanty and sickly fruits. It was hardy and full of sap ; and in all the various juices which it yielded might be distinguished the flavor of the Ausonian soil. "Satire," says Quintilian with just pride, "is all our own." Satire sprang, in truth, naturally from the constitution of the Roman government and from the spirit of the Roman people ; and, though at length subjected to metrical rules derived from Greece, retained to the last an essentially Roman character. Lucilius was the earliest satirist whose works were held in esteem under the Cæsars. But, many years before Lucilius was born, Nævius had been flung into a dungeon and guarded there with circumstances of unusual rigor, on account of the bitter lines in which he had attacked the great Cæcilian family.¹ The genius and spirit of the Roman satirist survived the liberty of their country, and were not extinguished by the cruel despotism of the Julian and Flavian Emperors. 10 The great poet who told the story of Domitian's turbot was the legitimate successor of those forgotten minstrels whose songs animated the factions of the infant Republic.

These minstrels, as Niebuhr has remarked, appear to have generally taken the popular side. We can hardly be 15 mistaken in supposing that, at the great crisis of the civil conflict, they employed themselves in versifying all the most powerful and virulent speeches of the Tribunes, and in heaping abuse on the leaders of the aristocracy. Every personal defect, every domestic scandal, every tradition 20 dishonorable to a noble house, would be sought out, brought into notice, and exaggerated. The illustrious head of the aristocratical party, Marcus Furius Camillus, might perhaps be, in some measure, protected by his venerable age and by the memory of his great services to 25 the State. But Appius Claudius Crassus enjoyed no such immunity. He was descended from a long line of ancestors distinguished by their haughty demeanor, and by the inflexibility with which they had withstood all the demands of the Plebeian order. While the political conduct and 30 the deportment of the Claudian nobles drew upon them the fiercest public hatred, they were accused of wanting, if any credit is due to the early history of Rome, a class of qualities which, in the military commonwealth, is sufficient to cover a multitude of offences. The chiefs of the family appear to have been eloquent, versed in civil business, and learned after the fashion of their age; but in war they were not distinguished by skill or valor. Some of them, as if conscious where their weakness lay, 5 had, when filling the highest magistracies, taken internal administration as their department of public business, and left the military command to their colleagues.¹ One of them had been intrusted with an army, and had failed ignominiously.² None of them had been honored with a 10 triumph. None of them had achieved any martial exploit, such as those by which Lucius Quinctius Cincinnatus, Titus Quinctius Capitolinus, Aulus Cornelius Cossus, and, above all, the great Camillus, had extorted the reluctant esteem of the multitude. During the Licinian 15 conflict, Appius Claudius Crassus signalized himself by the ability and severity with which he harangued against the two great agitators. He would naturally, therefore, be the favorite mark of the Plebeian satirists; nor would they have been at a loss to find a point on which he was 20 open to attack.

His grandfather, called, like himself, Appius Claudius, had left a name as much detested as that of Sextus Tarquinius. This elder Appius had been Consul more than seventy years before the introduction of the Licinian laws. 25 By availing himself of a singular crisis in public feeling, he had obtained the consent of the Commons to the abolition of the Tribuneship, and had been the chief of that Council of Ten to which the whole direction of the State had been committed. In a few months his admin- 30 istration had become universally odious. It had been swept away by an irresistible outbreak of popular fury; and its memory was still held in abhorrence by the whole city. The immediate cause of the downfall of this execrable government was said to have been an attempt made by Appius Claudius upon the chastity of a beautiful young girl of humble birth. The story ran that the Decemvir, unable to succeed by bribes and solicitations, resorted to an outrageous act of tyranny. A vile dependant of the Claudian house laid claim to the damsel as his slave. The cause was brought before the tribunal of Appius. The wicked magistrate, in defiance of the clearest proofs, gave judgment for the claimant. But the girl's father, a brave soldier, saved her from servitude and dishonor by stabbing her to the heart in the sight of the whole Forum. That blow was the signal for a general explosion. Camp and city rose at once; the Ten were pulled down; the Tribuneship was re-established; and Appius escaped the hands of the executioner only by a voluntary death.

It can hardly be doubted that a story so admirably adapted to the purposes both of the poet and of the demagogue would be eagerly seized upon by minstrels burning with hatred against the Patrician order, against the Claudian house, and especially against the grandson and namesake of the infamous Decemvir.

In order that the reader may judge fairly of these fragments of the lay of Virginia, he must imagine himself a Plebeian who has just voted for the re-election of Sextius and Licinius. All the power of the Patricians has been exerted to throw out the two great champions of the Commons. Every Posthumius, Æmilius, and Cornelius has used his influence to the utmost. Debtors have been let out of the workhouses on condition of voting against the men of the people; clients have been posted to hiss and interrupt the favorite candidates; Appius Claudius Crassus has spoken with more than his usual eloquence and asperity ; all has been in vain ; Licinius and Sextius have a fifth time carried all the tribes ; work is suspended ; the booths are closed ; the Plebeians bear on their shoulders the two champions of liberty through the Forum. Just at this moment it is announced that a popular poet, 5 a zealous adherent of the Tribunes, has made a new song which will cut the Claudian nobles to the heart. The crowd gathers round him and calls on him to recite it. He takes his stand on the spot where, according to tradition, Virginia, more than seventy years ago, was seized 10 by the pander of Appius, and he begins his story.

VIRGINIA

FRAGMENTS OF A LAY SUNG IN THE FORUM ON THE DAY
WHEREON LUCIUS SEXTIUS SEXTINUS LATERANUS AND CAIUS LICINIUS CALVUS STOLO WERE ELECTED TRI-BUNES OF THE COMMONS THE FIFTH TIME, IN THE YEAR OF THE CITY CCCLXXXII.

YE good men of the Commons, with loving hearts and true,

Who stand by the bold Tribunes that still have stood by you,

Come, make a circle round me, and mark my tale with care, —

A tale of what Rome once hath borne, of what Rome yet may bear.

This is no Grecian fable, of fountains running wine, 5
Of maids with snaky tresses, or sailors turned to swine.
Here, in this very Forum, under the noonday sun,

In sight of all the people, the bloody deed was done.
 Old men still creep among us who saw that fearful day,
 Just seventy years and seven ago, when the wicked Ten bare sway. 10

Of all the wicked Ten still the names are held accursed,
 And of all the wicked Ten Appius Claudius was the worst.
 He stalked along the Forum like King Tarquin in his pride;

Twelve axes waited on him, six marching on a side.

The townsmen shrank to right and left, and eyed askance with fear 15

His lowering brow, his curling mouth, which always seemed to sneer.

That brow of hate, that mouth of scorn, marks all the kindred still;

For never was there Claudius yet but wished the Commons ill.

Nor lacks he fit attendance; for close behind his heels,
 With outstretched chin and crouching pace, the client
 Marcus steals, 20

His loins girt up to run with speed, be the errand what it may,

And the smile flickering on his cheek for aught his lord may say.

Such varlets pimp and jest for hire among the lying Greeks;

Such varlets still are paid to hoot when brave Licinius speaks.

Where'er ye shed the honey, the buzzing flies will crowd; 25

Where'er ye fling the carrion, the raven's croak is loud;

Where'er down Tiber garbage floats, the greedy pike ye see;

And wheresoe'er such lord is found, such client still will be.

Just then, as through one cloudless chink in a black stormy sky
 Shines out the dewy morning-star, a fair young girl came
 by. 30
 With her small tablets in her hand and her satchel on her arm,
 Home she went bounding from the school, nor dreamed of
 shame or harm ;
 And past those dreaded axes she innocently ran,
 With bright, frank brow that had not learned to blush at gaze of man ;
 And up the Sacred Street she turned, and, as she danced along, 35
 She warbled gaily to herself lines of the good old song,
 How for a sport the princes came spurring from the camp,
 And found Lucrece combing the fleece under the midnight lamp.
 The maiden sang as sings the lark, when up he darts his flight
 From his nest in the green April corn to meet the morning light ; 40
 And Appius heard her sweet young voice, and saw her sweet young face,
 And loved her with the accursed love of his accursed race,
 And all along the Forum and up the Sacred Street
 His vulture eye pursued the trip of those small glancing feet.

* * * * *

Over the Alban mountains the light of morning broke ; 45
 From all the roofs of the Seven Hills curled the thin wreaths of smoke ;
 The city-gates were opened ; the Forum, all alive
 With buyers and with sellers, was humming like a hive ;

Blithely on brass and timber the craftsman's stroke was ringing,
And blithely o'er her panniers the market-girl was singing, 50
And blithely young Virginia came smiling from her home ;
Ah ! woe for young Virginia, the sweetest maid in Rome !
With her small tablets in her hand and her satchel on her
arm,
Forth she went bounding to the school, nor dreamed of
shame or harm.
She crossed the Forum shining with stalls in alleys gay, 55
And just had reached the very spot whereon I stand this day,
When up the varlet Marcus came ; not such as when ere-while
He crouched behind his patron's heels with the true client smile ;
He came with lowering forehead, swollen features, and clenched fist,
And strode across Virginia's path, and caught her by the wrist. 60
Hard strove the frightened maiden and screamed with look aghast,
And at her scream from right and left the folk came running fast, —
The money-changer Crispus, with his thin silver hairs,
And Hanno from the stately booth glittering with Punic
wares,
And the strong smith Muræna, grasping a half-forged brand, 65
And Volero the flesher, his cleaver in his hand.
All came in wrath and wonder, for all knew that fair child,
And, as she passed them twice a day, all kissed their hands and smiled ;
nd the strong smith Muræna gave Marcus such a blow,

The caitiff reeled three paces back, and let the maiden go. 70
Yet glared he fiercely round him, and growled in harsh,
fell tone,

“She’s mine, and I will have her ; I seek but for mine own.
She is my slave, born in my house, and stolen away and sold,

The year of the sore sickness, ere she was twelve hours old.
’T was in the sad September, the month of wail and fright ; 75
Two augurs were borne forth that morn, the Consul died ere night.

I wait on Appius Claudius, I waited on his sire ;
Let him who works the client wrong beware the patron’s ire !”

So spake the varlet Marcus ; and dread and silence came
On all the people at the sound of the great Claudian name. 80
For then there was no Tribune to speak the word of might,
Which makes the rich man tremble, and guards the poor man’s right.

There was no brave Licinius, no honest Sextius then ;
But all the city in great fear obeyed the wicked Ten.
Yet ere the varlet Marcus again might seize the maid, 85
Who clung tight to Muræna’s skirt and sobbed and shrieked for aid,

Forth through the throng of gazers the young Icilius pressed,
And stamped his foot, and rent his gown, and smote upon his breast,

And sprang upon that column, by many a minstrel sung,
Whereon three mouldering helmets, three rusting swords, 90 are hung,

And beckoned to the people, and in bold voice and clear Poured thick and fast the burning words which tyrants quake to hear :

"Now, by your children's cradles, now by your fathers'
graves,

Be men to-day, Quirites, or be forever slaves !

For this did Servius give us laws? For this did Lucrece bleed? 95

For this was the great vengeance wrought on Tarquin's evil seed ?

For this did those false sons make red the axes of their sire ?

For this did Scævola's right hand hiss in the Tuscan fire ?

Shall the vile fox-earth awe the race that stormed the lion's den ?

Shall we, who could not brook one lord, crouch to the wicked Ten? 100

O for that ancient spirit which curbed the Senate's will !

O for the tents which in old time whitened the Sacred Hill !

In those brave days our fathers stood firmly side by side ;

They faced the Marcian fury, they tamed the Fabian pride ;

They drove the fiercest Quinctius an outcast forth from Rome ; 105

They sent the haughtiest Claudius with shivered fasces home.

But what their care bequeathed us our madness flung away ;

All the ripe fruit of threescore years was blighted in a day.

Exult, ye proud Patricians ! The hard-fought fight is o'er.

We strove for honors — 't was in vain ; for freedom —
't is no more. 110

No crier to the polling summons the eager throng ;

No Tribune breathes the word of might that guards the weak from wrong.

Our very hearts, that were so high, sink down beneath your will.

Riches and lands, and power and state — ye have them ;
keep them still.

'll keep the holy fillets ; still keep the purple gown, 115

The axes and the curule chair, the car and laurel crown ;
 Still press us for your cohorts, and, when the fight is done,
 Still fill your garners from the soil which our good swords have won.

Still, like a spreading ulcer which leech-craft may not cure,
 Let your foul usance eat away the substance of the poor. 120
 Still let your haggard debtors bear all their fathers bore ;
 Still let your dens of torment be noisome as of yore ;
 No fire when Tiber freezes, no air in dog-star heat ;
 And store of rods for free-born backs, and holes for freeborn feet.

Heap heavier still the fetters, bar closer still the grate ; 125
 Patient as sheep we yield us up unto your cruel hate.
 But, by the Shades beneath us, and by the Gods above,
 Add not unto your cruel hate your yet more cruel love !
 Have ye not graceful ladies, whose spotless lineage springs
 From Consuls and High Pontiffs and ancient Alban kings — 130

Ladies who deign not on our paths to set their tender feet,
 Who from their cars look down with scorn upon the wondering street,
 Who in Corinthian mirrors their own proud smiles behold,
 And breathe of Capuan odors, and shine with Spanish
 gold ?

Then leave the poor Plebeian his single tie to life — 135
 The sweet, sweet love of daughter, of sister, and of wife,
 The gentle speech, the balm for all that his vexed soul endures,
 The kiss, in which he half forgets even such a yoke as yours.

Still let the maiden's beauty swell the father's breast with pride ;
 Still let the bridegroom's arms infold an unpolluted bride. 140
 Spare us the inexpiable wrong, the unutterable shame,

That turns the coward's heart to steel, the sluggard's blood to flame,

Lest, when our latest hope is fled, ye taste of our despair,
And learn by proof in some wild hour how much the wretched dare."

Straightway Virginius led the maid a little space aside, 145
To where the reeking shambles stood, piled up with horn and hide,

Close to yon low dark archway, where in a crimson flood Leaps down to the great sewer the gurgling stream of blood.

Hard by, a flesher on a block had laid his whittle down ;
Virginius caught the whittle up and hid it in his gown. 150
And then his eyes grew very dim, and his throat began to swell,

And in a hoarse, changed voice he spake, "Farewell, sweet child ! Farewell !

O, how I loved my darling ! Though stern I sometimes be,
To thee thou know'st I was not so. Who could be so to thee ?

And how my darling loved me ! How glad she was to hear 155
My footstep on the threshold when I came back last year !
And how she danced with pleasure to see my civic crown,
And took my sword and hung it up, and brought me forth my gown !

Now, all those things are over—yes, all thy pretty ways,
Thy needlework, thy prattle, thy snatches of old lays ; 160
And none will grieve when I go forth, or smile when I return,

Or watch beside the old man's bed, or weep upon his urn.

o house that was the happiest within the Roman walls,

The house that envied not the wealth of Capua's marble halls,
Now, for the brightness of thy smile, must have eternal gloom, 165
And for the music of thy voice, the silence of the tomb.
The time is come. See how he points his eager hand this way!
See how his eyes gloat on thy grief like a kite's upon the prey!
With all his wit, he little deems that, spurned, betrayed,
bereft,
Thy father hath in his despair one fearful refuge left. 170
He little deems that in this hand I clutch what still can save Thy gentle youth from taunts and blows, the portion of the slave;
Yea, and from nameless evil, that passeth taunt and blow—
Foul outrage which thou knowest not, which thou shalt never know.
Then clasp me round the neck once more, and give me
one more kiss; 175
And now, mine own dear little girl, there is no way but this."
With that he lifted high the steel and smote her in the side,
And in her blood she sank to earth, and with one sob she died.

Then, for a little moment, all people held their breath,
And through the crowded Forum was stillness as of death; 180
And in another moment brake forth from one and all
A cry as if the Volscians were coming o'er the wall.
Some with averted faces shrieking fled home amain;
Some ran to call a leech, and some ran to lift the slain;
Some felt her lips and little wrist, if life might there be found; 185

And some tore up their garments fast, and strove to stanch the wound.
 In vain they ran and felt and stanchèd; for never truer blow
 That good right arm had dealt in fight against a Volscian foe.

When Appius Claudius saw that deed, he shuddered and sank down,
 And hid his face some little space with the corner of his gown, 190
 Till with white lips and bloodshot eyes Virginius tottered nigh,
 And stood before the judgment-seat, and held the knife on high.
 "O dwellers in the nether gloom, avengers of the slain,
 By this dear blood I cry to you, do right between us twain ;
 And even as Appius Claudius hath dealt by me and mine, 195
 Deal you by Appius Claudius and all the Claudian line!"
 So spake the slayer of his child, and turned and went his way ;
 But first he cast one haggard glance to where the body
 lay,
 And writhed, and groaned a fearful groan, and then with steadfast feet
 Strode right across the market-place unto the Sacred Street. 200

Then up sprang Appius Claudius : " Stop him, alive or dead !
 Ten thousand pounds of copper to the man who brings his head."
 looked upon his clients, but none would work his will ;

He looked upon his lictors, but they trembled and stood still.

And, as Virginius through the press his way in silence cleft, 205

Ever the mighty multitude fell back to right and left.
And he hath passed in safety unto his woful home,
And there ta'en horse to tell the camp what deeds are done in Rome.

By this the flood of people was swollen from every side,
And streets and porches round were filled with that o'er-flowing tide; 210

And close around the body gathered a little train
Of them that were the nearest and dearest to the slain.
They brought a bier, and hung it with many a cypress crown,

And gently they uplifted her, and gently laid her down.
The face of Appius Claudius wore the Claudian scowl and sneer, 215

And in the Claudian note he cried, "What doth this rabble here?

Have they no crafts to mind at home, that hitherward they stray?

Ho! lictors, clear the market-place, and fetch the corpse away!"

The voice of grief and fury till then had not been loud;
But a deep sullen murmur wandered among the crowd, 220
Like the moaning noise that goes before the whirlwind on the deep,

Or the growl of a fierce watch-dog but half aroused from sleep.

But when the lictors at that word, tall yeomen all and strong,
Each with his axe and sheaf of twigs, went down into the throng,

Those old men say who saw that day of sorrow and of sin 225
 That in the Roman Forum was never such a din.
 The wailing, hooting, cursing, the howls of grief and hate,
 Were heard beyond the Pincian Hill, beyond the Latin Gate.
 But close around the body, where stood the little train
 Of them that were the nearest and dearest to the slain, 230
 No cries were there, but teeth set fast, low whispers and black frowns,
 And breaking up of benches and girding up of gowns.
 'T was well the lictors might not pierce to where the maiden lay,
 Else surely had they been all twelve torn limb from limb that day.
 Right glad they were to struggle back, blood streaming from their heads, 235
 With axes all in splinters and raiment all in shreds.
 Then Appius Claudius gnawed his lip, and the blood left his cheek,
 And thrice he beckoned with his hand, and thrice he strove to speak ;
 And thrice the tossing Forum set up a frightful yell :
 " See, see, thou dog ! what thou hast done, and hide thy shame in hell ! 240
 Thou that wouldst make our maidens slaves must first make slaves of men.
 Tribunes ! Hurrah for Tribunes ! Down with the wicked
 Ten ! "
 And straightway, thick as hailstones, came whizzing through the air
 Pebbles and bricks and potsherds all round the curule
 chair ;
 And upon Appius Claudius great fear and trembling came, 245

For never was a Claudius yet brave against aught but shame.

Though the great houses love us not, we own, to do them right,

That the great houses, all save one, have borne them well in fight.

Still Caius of Corioli, his triumphs and his wrongs,
His vengeance and his mercy, live in our camp-fire songs. 250
Beneath the yoke of Furius oft have Gaul and Tuscan bowed;

And Rome may bear the pride of him of whom herself is proud.

But evermore a Claudius shrinks from a stricken field,
And changes color like a maid at sight of sword and shield.

The Claudian triumphs all were won within the city towers; 255

The Claudian yoke was never pressed on any necks but ours.

A Cossus, like a wild cat, springs ever at the face;
A Fabius rushes like a boar against the shouting chase;
But the vile Claudian litter, raging with currish spite, Still yelps and snaps at those who run, still runs from those who smite. 260

So now 't was seen of Appius; when stones began to fly,
He shook and crouched, and wrung his hands, and smote
upon his thigh:

“ Kind clients, honest lictors, stand by me in this fray!
Must I be torn in pieces? Home, home, the nearest way!”

While yet he spake, and looked around with a bewildered stare, 265

Four sturdy lictors put their necks beneath the curule
chair;

And fourscore clients on the left and fourscore on the right Arrayed themselves with swords and staves, and loins girt up for fight.

But, though without or staff or sword, so furious was the throng

That scarce the train with might and main could bring their lord along. 270

Twelve times the crowd made at him, five times they seized his gown;

Small chance was his to rise again, if once they got him down;

And sharper came the pelting, and evermore the yell—“Tribunes! we will have Tribunes!”—rose with a louder
 swell;

And the chair tossed as tosses a bark with tattered sail 275

When raves the Adriatic beneath an eastern gale,
 When the Calabrian sea-marks are lost in clouds of spume,
 And the great Thunder-Cape has donned his veil of inky
 gloom.

One stone hit Appius in the mouth, and one beneath the ear,

And ere he reached Mount Palatine he swooned with pain and fear. 280

His cursed head, that he was wont to hold so high with pride,

Now, like a drunken man's, hung down and swayed from side to side;

And when his stout retainers had brought him to his door,
 His face and neck were all one cake of filth and clotted gore.

As Appius Claudius was that day, so may his grandson be!
 God send Rome one such other sight, and send me there to see! 286

THE PROPHECY OF CAPYS

It can hardly be necessary to remind any reader that, according to the popular tradition, Romulus, after he had slain his grand-uncle Amulius, and restored his grandfather Numitor, determined to quit Alba, the hereditary domain of the Sylvian princes, and to found a new city. 5 The Gods, it was added, vouchsafed the clearest signs of the favor with which they regarded the enterprise, and of the high destinies reserved for the young colony.

This event was likely to be a favorite theme of the old Latin minstrels. They would naturally attribute the project of Romulus to some divine intimation of the power and prosperity which it was decreed that his city should attain. They would probably introduce seers foretelling the victories of unborn Consuls and Dictators, and the last great victory would generally occupy the most conspicuous place in the prediction. There is nothing strange in the supposition that the poet who was employed to celebrate the first great triumph of the Romans over the Greeks might throw his song of exultation into this form. 15

The occasion was one likely to excite the strongest feelings of national pride. A great outrage had been followed by a great retribution. Seven years before this time, Lucius Posthumius Megellus, who sprang from one of the noblest houses of Rome, and had been thrice Consul, was sent ambassador to Tarentum, with charge to demand reparation for grievous injuries. The Tarentines gave him audience in their theatre, where he addressed 25 them in such Greek as he could command, which, we may well believe, was not exactly such as Cineas would have spoken. An exquisite sense of the ridiculous belonged to the Greek character; and closely connected with this 5 faculty was a strong propensity to flippancy and impertinence. When Posthumius placed an accent wrong, his hearers burst into a laugh. When he remonstrated, they hooted him and called him barbarian, and at length hissed him off the stage as if he had been a bad actor. As the 10 grave Roman retired, a buffoon, who from his constant drunkenness was nicknamed the Pint-pot, came up with gestures of the grossest indecency, and bespattered the senatorial gown with filth. Posthumius turned round to the multitude, and held up the gown, as if appealing to 15 the universal law of nations. The sight only increased the insolence of the Tarentines. They clapped their hands, and set up a shout of laughter which shook the theatre. "Men of Tarentum," said Posthumius, "it will take not a little blood to wash this gown."¹

20 Rome, in consequence of this insult, declared war against the Tarentines. The Tarentines sought for allies beyond the Ionian Sea. Pyrrhus, king of Epirus, came to their help with a large army; and, for the first time, the two great nations of antiquity were fairly matched against 25 each other.

The fame of Greece in arms as well as in arts was then at the height. Half a century earlier, the career of Alexander had excited the admiration and terror of all nations from the Ganges to the Pillars of Hercules. 30 Royal houses, founded by Macedonian captains, still reigned at Antioch and Alexandria. That barbarian warriors, led by barbarian chiefs, should win a pitched battle against Greek valor guided by Greek science, seemed as incredible as it would now seem that the Burmese or the Siamese should, in the open plain, put to flight an equal number of the best English troops. The Tarentines were convinced that their countrymen were irresistible in war; and this conviction had emboldened 5 them to treat with the grossest indignity one whom they regarded as the representative of an inferior race. Of the Greek generals then living, Pyrrhus was indisputably the first. Among the troops who were trained in the Greek discipline his Epirotes ranked high. His expedi- 10 tion to Italy was a turning-point in the history of the world. He found there a people who, far inferior to the Athenians and Corinthians in the fine arts, in the speculative sciences, and in all the refinements of life, were the best soldiers on the face of the earth. Their arms, 15 their gradations of rank, their order of battle, their method of intrenchment, were all of Latian origin, and had all been gradually brought near to perfection, not by the study of foreign models, but by the genius and experience of many generations of great native commanders. 20

The first words which broke from the king, when his practised eye had surveyed the Roman encampment, were full of meaning: "These barbarians," he said, "have nothing barbarous in their military arrangements." He was at first victorious; for his own talents were superior 25 to those of the captains who were opposed to him; and the Romans were not prepared for the onset of the elephants of the East, which were then for the first time seen in Italy—moving mountains, with long snakes for hands.¹ But the victories of the Epirotes were fiercely 30 disputed, dearly purchased, and altogether unprofitable.
At length Manius Curius Dentatus, who had in his first ¹ Anguimanus is the old Latin epithet for an elephant. Lucretius, ii. 538, v. 1302.

Consulship won two triumphs, was again placed at the head of the Roman Commonwealth, and sent to encounter the invaders. A great battle was fought near Beneventum. Pyrrhus was completely defeated. He repassed the sea ;
5 and the world learned with amazement that a people had been discovered who, in fair fighting, were superior to the best troops that had been drilled on the system of Parmenio and Antigonus.

The conquerors had a good right to exult in their success ; for their glory was all their own. They had not learned from their enemy how to conquer him. It was with their own national arms, and in their own national battle-array, that they had overcome weapons and tactics long believed to be invincible. The pilum and the broad-15 sword had vanquished the Macedonian spear. The legion had broken the Macedonian phalanx. Even the elephants, when the surprise produced by their first appearance was over, could cause no disorder in the steady yet flexible battalions of Rome.

20 It is said by Florus, and may easily be believed, that the triumph far surpassed in magnificence any that Rome had previously seen. The only spoils which Papirius Cursor and Fabius Maximus could exhibit were flocks and herds, wagons of rude structure, and heaps of spears
25 and helmets. But now, for the first time, the riches of Asia and the arts of Greece adorned a Roman pageant. Plate, fine stuffs, costly furniture, rare animals, exquisite paintings and sculptures, formed part of the procession. At the banquet would be assembled a crowd of warriors
30 and statesmen, among whom Manius Curius Dentatus would take the highest room. Caius Fabricius Luscinus, then, after two Consulships and two triumphs, Censor of the Commonwealth, would doubtless occupy a place of honor at the board. In situations less conspicuous probably lay some of those who were, a few years later, the terror of Carthage, — Caius Duilius, the founder of the maritime greatness of his country; Marcus Atilius Regulus, who owed to defeat a renown far higher than that which he had derived from his victories; and Caius Lutatius Catulus, who, while suffering from a grievous wound, fought the great battle of the Ægates, and brought the First Punic War to a triumphant close. It is impossible to recount the names of these eminent citizens without reflecting that they were all, without exception, Plebeians, and would, but for the ever-memorable struggle maintained by Caius Licinius and Lucius Sextius, have been doomed to hide in obscurity, or to waste in civil broils the capacity and energy which prevailed against Pyrrhus and Hamilcar.

On such a day we may suppose that the patriotic enthusiasm of a Latin poet would vent itself in reiterated shouts of Io triumphe, such as were uttered by Horace on a far less exciting occasion, and in boasts resembling those which Virgil put into the mouth of Anchises. The superiority of some foreign nations, and especially of the Greeks, in the lazy arts of peace would be admitted with disdainful candor; but pre-eminence in all the qualities which fit a people to subdue and govern mankind would be claimed for the Romans.

The following lay belongs to the latest age of Latin ballad-poetry. Nævius and Livius Andronicus were probably among the children whose mothers held them up to see the chariot of Curius go by. The minstrel who sang on that day might possibly have lived to read the first hexameters of Ennius, and to see the first comedies of Plautus. His poem, as might be expected, shows a much wider acquaintance with the geography, manners, and productions of remote nations than would have been found in compositions of the age of Camillus. But he troubles himself little about dates, and having heard travellers talk with admiration of the Colossus of Rhodes, and of the structures and gardens with which the Macedonian kings of Syria had embellished their residence on the banks of the Orontes, he has never thought of inquiring whether these things existed in the age of Romulus. 5

A LAY SUNG AT THE BANQUET IN THE CAPITOL, ON THE DAY WHEREON MANIUS CURIUS DENTATUS, A SECOND TIME CONSUL, TRIUMPHED OVER KING PYRRHUS AND THE TARENTINES, IN THE YEAR OF THE CITY CCCCLXXIX.

I

Now slain is King Amulius
 Of the great Sylvian line,
 Who reigned in Alba Longa
 On the throne of Aventine.
 Slain is the Pontiff Camers, 5
 Who spake the words of doom :
 "The children to the Tiber,
 The mother to the tomb."

II

In Alba's lake no fisher
 His net to-day is flinging ; 10
 On the dark rind of Alba's oaks
 To-day no axe is ringing ;

The yoke hangs o'er the manger,
The scythe lies in the hay ;
Through all the Alban villages 15
No work is done to-day.

III

And every Alban burgher
Hath donned his whitest gown ;
And every head in Alba 20
Weareth a poplar crown ;
And every Alban door-post
With boughs and flowers is gay ;
For to-day the dead are living,
The lost are found to-day.

IV

They were doomed by a bloody king, 25
They were doomed by a lying priest ;
They were cast on the raging flood,
They were tracked by the raging beast.
Raging beast and raging flood
Alike have spared the prey ; 30
And to-day the dead are living,
The lost are found to-day.

V

The troubled river knew them,
And smoothed his yellow foam,
And gently rocked the cradle 35
That bore the fate of Rome.
The ravening she-wolf knew them,
And licked them o'er and o'er,
And gave them of her own fierce milk,
Rich with raw flesh and gore.

Those old men say who saw that day of sorrow and of sin 225

That in the Roman Forum was never such a din.
The wailing, hooting, cursing, the howls of grief and hate,

While yet he spake, and looked around with a bewildered
stare, 265

Four sturdy lictors put their necks beneath the curule
chair;

And up stood stiff his thin white hair,
 And his blind eyes flashed fire :
 " Hail ! foster child of the wondrous nurse !
 Hail ! son of the wondrous sire ! 100

XII

" But thou— what dost thou here
 In the old man's peaceful hall ?
 What doth the eagle in the coop,
 The bison in the stall ?
 Our corn fills many a garner, 105
 Our vines clasp many a tree,
 Our flocks are white on many a hill,
 But these are not for thee.

XIII

" For thee no treasure ripens
 In the Tartessian mine ; 110
 For thee no ship brings precious bales
 Across the Libyan brine ;
 Thou shalt not drink from amber,
 Thou shalt not rest on down ;
 Arabia shall not steep thy locks, 115
 Nor Sidon tinge thy gown.

XIV

" Leave gold and myrrh and jewels,
 Rich table and soft bed,
 To them who of man's seed are born,
 Whom woman's milk hath fed. 120
 Thou wast not made for lucre,
 For pleasure, nor for rest ;
 Thou, that art sprung from the War-god's loins,
 And hast tugged at the she-wolf's breast.

“ From sunrise unto sunset 125
All earth shall hear thy fame ;
A glorious city thou shalt build,
And name it by thy name ;
And there, unquenched through ages,
Like Vesta’s sacred fire, 130
Shall live the spirit of thy nurse,
The spirit of thy sire.

XVI

“ The ox toils through the furrow,
Obedient to the goad ;
The patient ass up flinty paths 135
Plods with his weary load ;
With whine and bound the spaniel
His master’s whistle hears ;
And the sheep yields her patiently
To the loud clashing shears. 140

XVII

“ But thy nurse will hear no master,
Thy nurse will bear no load ;
And woe to them that shear her,
And woe to them that goad !
When all the pack, loud baying, 145
Her bloody lair surrounds,
She dies in silence, biting hard,
Amidst the dying hounds.

XVIII

“ Pomona loves the orchard,
And Liber loves the vine, 150

And Pales loves the straw-built shed
 Warm with the breath of kine ;
 And Venus loves the whispers
 Of plighted youth and maid,
 In April's ivory moonlight 155
 Beneath the chestnut shade.

XIX

“ But thy father loves the clashing
 Of broadsword and of shield ;
 He loves to drink the steam that reeks
 From the fresh battlefield ; 160
 He smiles a smile more dreadful
 Than his own dreadful frown,
 When he sees the thick black cloud of smoke
 Go up from the conquered town.

XX

“ And such as is the War-god, 165
 The author of thy line,
 And such as she who suckled thee,
 Even such be thou and thine.
 Leave to the soft Campanian
 His baths and his perfumes ; 170
 Leave to the sordid race of Tyre
 Their dyeing-vats and looms ;
 Leave to the sons of Carthage
 The rudder and the oar ;
 Leave to the Greek his marble Nymphs 175
 And scrolls of wordy lore.

XXI

“ Thine, Roman, is the pilum ;
 Roman, the sword is thine.

The even trench, the bristling mound,
 The legion's ordered line; 180
 And thine the wheels of triumph,
 Which with their laurelled train
 Move slowly up the shouting streets
 To Jove's eternal fane.

XXII

"Beneath thy yoke the Volscian 185
 Shall veil his lofty brow;
 Soft Capua's curled revellers
 Before thy chairs shall bow;
 The Lucumoes of Arnus
 Shall quake thy rods to see; 190
 And the proud Samnite's heart of steel
 Shall yield to only thee.

XXIII

"The Gaul shall come against thee
 From the land of snow and night;
 Thou shalt give his fair-haired armies 195
 To the raven and the kite.

XXIV

"The Greek shall come against thee,
 The conqueror of the East.
 Beside him stalks to battle
 The huge earth-shaking beast — 200
 The beast on whom the castle
 With all its guards doth stand,
 The beast who hath between his eyes
 The serpent for a hand.
 First march the bold Epirotes, 205
 Wedged close with shield and spear,

And the ranks of false Tarentum
Are glittering in the rear.

XXV

“The ranks of false Tarentum
Like hunted sheep shall fly; 210
In vain the bold Epirotes
Shall round their standards die;
And Apennine’s gray vultures
Shall have a noble feast
On the fat and the eyes 215
Of the huge earth-shaking beast.

XXVI

“Hurrah for the good weapons
That keep the War-god’s land!
Hurrah for Rome’s stout pilum
In a stout Roman hand! 220
Hurrah for Rome’s short broadsword,
That through the thick array
Of levelled spears and serried shields
Hews deep its gory way!

XXVII

“Hurrah for the great triumph 225
That stretches many a mile!
Hurrah for the wan captives
That pass in endless file!
Ho! bold Epirotes, whither
Hath the Red King ta’en flight? 230
Ho! dogs of false Tarentum,
Is not the gown washed white?

XXVIII

“ Hurrah for the great triumph
That stretches many a mile !
Hurrah for the rich dye of Tyre, 235
And the fine web of Nile,
The helmets gay with plumage
Torn from the pheasant’s wings,
The belts set thick with starry gems
That shone on Indian kings, 240
The urns of massy silver,
The goblets rough with gold,
The many-colored tablets bright
With loves and wars of old,
The stone that breathes and struggles, 245
The brass that seems to speak ! —
Such cunning they who dwell on high
Have given unto the Greek.

XXIX

“ Hurrah for Manius Curius,
The bravest son of Rome, 250
Thrice in utmost need sent forth,
Thrice drawn in triumph home !
Weave, weave, for Manius Curius
The third embroidered gown ;
Make ready the third lofty car, 255
And twine the third green crown ;
And yoke the steeds of Rosea
With necks like a bended bow,
And deck the bull, Mevania’s bull,
The bull as white as snow. 260

XXX

"Blest and thrice blest the Roman
 Who sees Rome's brightest day,
 Who sees that long victorious pomp
 Wind down the Sacred Way,
 And through the bellowing Forum, 265
 And round the Suppliant's Grove,
 Up to the everlasting gates
 Of Capitolian Jove.

XXXI

"Then where o'er two bright havens
 The towers of Corinth frown ; 270
 Where the gigantic King of Day
 On his own Rhodes looks down ;
 Where soft Orontes murmurs
 Beneath the laurel shades ;
 Where Nile reflects the endless length 275
 Of dark-red colonnades ;
 Where in the still deep water,
 Sheltered from waves and blasts,
 Bristles the dusky forest
 Of Byrsa's thousand masts ; 280
 Where fur-clad hunters wander
 Amidst the northern ice ;
 Where through the sand of morning-land
 The camel bears the spice ;
 Where Atlas flings his shadow 285
 Far o'er the western foam,
 Shall be great fear on all who hear
 The mighty name of Rome."

THE ARMADA, IVRY
AND
THE BATTLE OF NASEBY

THE ARMADA

A FRAGMENT

ATTEND, all ye who list to hear our noble England's praise ;
I tell of the thrice famous deeds she wrought in ancient days,
When that great fleet invincible against her bore in vain
The richest spoils of Mexico, the stoutest hearts of Spain.

It was about the lovely close of a warm summer day, 5
There came a gallant merchant-ship full sail to Plymouth Bay ;
Her crew hath seen Castile's black fleet, beyond Aurigny's isle,
At earliest twilight, on the waves lie heaving many a mile.
At sunrise she escaped their van, by God's especial grace ;
And the tall Pinta, till the noon, had held her close in chase. 10
Forthwith a guard at every gun was placed along the wall ;
The beacon blazed upon the roof of Edgumbe's lofty hall ;
Many a light fishing-bark put out to pry along the coast,
And with loose rein and bloody spur rode inland many a post.
With his white hair unbonneted, the stout old sheriff comes ; 15 Behind him march the halberdiers ; before him sound the drums ;
His yeomen round the market cross make clear an ample space ;
For there behooves him to set up the standard of Her Grace.
And haughtily the trumpets peal, and gaily dance the bells,
As slow upon the laboring wind the royal blazon swells. 20
Look how the Lion of the sea lifts up his ancient crown,
And underneath his deadly paw treads the gay lilies down !
So stalked he when he turned to flight, on that famed Picard field,
Bohemia's plume, and Genoa's bow, and Cæsar's eagle shield.

So glared he when at Agincourt in wrath he turned to bay, 25
 And crushed and torn beneath his claws the princely hunters lay.

Ho! strike the flagstaff deep, Sir Knight; ho! scatter flowers, fair maids;

Ho! gunners, fire a loud salute; ho! gallants, draw your blades;

Thou sun, shine on her joyously; ye breezes, waft her wide;

Our glorious SEMPER EADEM, the banner of our pride. 30

The freshening breeze of eve unfurled that banner's massy fold;

The parting gleam of sunshine kissed that haughty scroll of
 gold;

Night sank upon the dusky beach, and on the purple sea,
 Such night in England ne'er had been, nor e'er again shall be.

From Eddystone to Berwick bounds, from Lynn to Milford
 Bay, 35

That time of slumber was as bright and busy as the day;
 For swift to east and swift to west the ghastly war-flame spread,

High on St. Michael's Mount it shone; it shone on Beachy Head.

Far on the deep the Spaniard saw, along each southern shire,
 Cape beyond cape, in endless range, those twinkling points of fire. 40

The fisher left his skiff to rock on Tamar's glittering waves;
 The rugged miners poured to war from Mendip's sunless caves;

O'er Longleat's towers, o'er Cranbourne's oaks, the fiery herald flew:

He roused the shepherds of Stonehenge, the rangers of Beaulieu.

Right sharp and quick the bells all night rang out from Bristol town, 45
And ere the day three hundred horse had met on Clifton
down ;
The sentinel on Whitehall gate looked forth into the night,
And saw o'erhanging Richmond Hill the streak of blood-red light.
Then bugle's note and cannon's roar the deathlike silence broke,
And with one start, and with one cry, the royal city woke. 50
At once on all her stately gates arose the answering fires ;
At once the wild alarum clashed from all her reeling spires ;
From all the batteries of the Tower pealed loud the voice of fear ;
And all the thousand masts of Thames sent back a louder cheer ;
And from the furthest wards was heard the rush of hurrying
feet, 55
And the broad streams of pikes and flags rushed down each roaring street ;
And broader still became the blaze, and louder still the din,
As fast from every village round the horse came spurring in ;
And eastward straight from wild Blackheath the warlike errand went,
And roused in many an ancient hall the gallant squires of Kent. 60
Southward from Surrey's pleasant hills flew those bright couriers forth ;
High on bleak Hampstead's swarthy moor they started for the north ;
And on, and on, without a pause, untired they bounded still ;
All night from tower to tower they sprang ; they sprang from hill to hill :

Till the proud peak unfurled the flag o'er Darwin's rocky dales, 65
 Till like volcanoes flared to heaven the stormy hills of Wales, Till twelve fair counties saw the blaze on Malvern's lonely height,
 Till streamed in crimson on the wind the Wrekin's crest of light,
 Till broad and fierce the star came forth on Ely's stately fane,
 And tower and hamlet rose in arms o'er all the boundless plain ; 70
 Till Belvoir's lordly terraces the sign to Lincoln sent,
 And Lincoln sped the message on o'er the wide vale of Trent ;
 Till Skiddaw saw the fire that burned on Gaunt's embattled pile,
 And the red glare on Skiddaw roused the burghers of Carlisle.

IVRY

A SONG OF THE HUGUENOTS

Now glory to the Lord of Hosts, from whom all glories are !
And glory to our Sovereign Liege, King Henry of Navarre !
Now let there be the merry sound of music and of dance,
Through thy cornfields green, and sunny vines, O pleasant land of France !

And thou, Rochelle, our own Rochelle, proud city of the waters,

5

Again let rapture light the eyes of all thy mourning daughters.
As thou wert constant in our ills, be joyous in our joy,
For cold, and stiff, and still are they who wrought thy walls annoy.

Hurrah ! Hurrah ! a single field hath turned the chance of war,

Hurrah ! Hurrah ! for Ivry, and Henry of Navarre.

10

Oh ! how our hearts were beating when, at the dawn of day,
We saw the army of the League drawn out in long array ;
With all its priest-led citizens, and all its rebel peers,
And Appenzel's stout infantry, and Egmont's Flemish spears.
There rode the brood of false Lorraine, the curses of our land ;

15

And dark Mayenne was in the midst, a truncheon in his hand :

And, as we looked on them, we thought of Seine's empurpled flood,

And good Coligni's hoary hair all dabbled with his blood ;
And we cried unto the living God, who rules the fate of war,
To fight for his own holy name, and Henry of Navarre.

20

The King is come to marshal us, in all his armor drest,
And he has bound a snow-white plume upon his gallant crest.

He looked upon his people, and a tear was in his eye ;
He looked upon the traitors, and his glance was stern and high.

Right graciously he smiled on us, as rolled from wing to wing, 25

Down all our line, a deafening shout, " God save our Lord the King ! "

" And if my standard-bearer fall, as fall full well he may,
For never saw I promise yet of such a bloody fray, Press where ye see my white plume shine, amidst the ranks
of war,

And be your oriflamme to-day the helmet of Navarre." 30

Hurrah ! the foes are moving. Hark to the mingled din
Of fife, and steed, and trump, and drum, and roaring culverin.
The fiery Duke is pricking fast across Saint André's plain,
With all the hireling chivalry of Guelders and Almayne.

Now by the lips of those ye love, fair gentlemen of France, 35

Charge for the golden lilies, — upon them with the lance !
A thousand spurs are striking deep, a thousand spears in rest,

A thousand knights are pressing close behind the snow-white
crest ;

And in they burst, and on they rushed, while like a guiding star,

Amidst the thickest carnage blazed the helmet of Navarre. 40

Now, God be praised, the day is ours. Mayenne hath turned his rein.

D'Aumale hath cried for quarter. The Flemish count is slain.

Their ranks are breaking like thin clouds before a Biscay gale ;

The field is heaped with bleeding steeds, and flags, and cloven mail.

And then we thought on vengeance, and, all along our van, 45
"Remember St. Bartholomew!" was passed from man to man.

But out spake gentle Henry, "No Frenchman is my foe :
Down, down with every foreigner, but let your brethren go."
Oh! was there ever such a knight, in friendship or in war,
As our Sovereign Lord, King Henry, the soldier of Navarre? 50

Right well fought all the Frenchmen who fought for France to-day ;

And many a lordly banner God gave them for a prey.

But we of the religion have borne us best in fight ;

And the good Lord of Rosny hath ta'en the cornet white.

Our own true Maximilian the cornet white hath ta'en, 55

The cornet white with crosses black, the flag of false Lorraine.

Up with it high ; unfurl it wide ; that all the host may know

How God hath humbled the proud house which wrought his church such woe.

Then on the ground, while trumpets sound their loudest point
of war,

Fling the red shreds, a footcloth meet for Henry of Navarre. 60

Ho! maidens of Vienna ; ho! matrons of Lucerne ;

Weep, weep, and rend your hair for those who never shall return.

Ho! Philip, send, for charity, thy Mexican pistoles,

That Antwerp monks may sing a mass for thy poor spear-men's souls.

Ho! gallant nobles of the League, look that your arms be bright; 65

Ho! burghers of Saint Genevieve, keep watch and ward to-night.

For our God hath crushed the tyrant, our God hath raised the slave,

And mocked the counsel of the wise, and the valor of the brave.

Then glory to his holy name, from whom all glories are;
And glory to our Sovereign Lord, King Henry of Navarre. 70

THE BATTLE OF NASEBY

BY OBADIAH BIND-THEIR-KINGS-IN-CHAINS-AND-THEIR-NOBLES-WITH-LINKS-OF-IRON, SERGEANT IN IRETON'S REGIMENT

OH! wherefore come ye forth, in triumph from the North,
With your hands, and your feet, and your raiment all red?
And wherefore doth your rout send forth a joyous shout?
And whence be the grapes of the wine-press which ye tread?

Oh! evil was the root, and bitter was the fruit, 5
And crimson was the juice of the vintage that we trod;
For we trampled on the throng of the haughty and the strong,
Who sate in the high places, and slew the saints of God.

It was about the noon of a glorious day of June,
That we saw their banners dance, and their cuirasses shine, 10
And the Man of Blood was there, with his long essenced hair,
And Astley, and Sir Marmaduke, and Rupert of the Rhine.

Like a servant of the Lord, with his Bible and his sword,
The General rode along us to form us to the fight,
When a murmuring sound broke out, and swell'd into a shout, 15
Among the godless horsemen upon the tyrant's right.

And hark! like the roar of the billows on the shore,
The cry of battle rises along their charging line!
For God! for the Cause! for the Church! for the Laws!
For Charles, King of England, and Rupert of the Rhine! 20

The furious German comes, with his clarions and his drums,
His bravoës of Alsatia, and pages of Whitehall;

They are bursting on our flanks. Grasp your pikes! close your ranks!

For Rupert never comes but to conquer or to fall.

They are here! They rush on! We are broken! We are gone! 25
Our left is borne before them like stubble on the blast.

O Lord, put forth thy might! O Lord, defend the right!
Stand back to back, in God's name, and fight it to the last!

Stout Skippon hath a wound; the center hath given ground:
Hark! hark! — What means the trampling of horsemen on our rear? 30

Whose banner do I see, boys? 'T is he, thank God, 't is he, boys!

Bear up another minute: brave Oliver is here!

Their heads all stooping low, their points all in a row,
Like a whirlwind on the trees, like a deluge on the dykes,
Our cuirassiers have burst on the ranks of the Accurst, 35
And at a shock have scattered the forest of his pikes.

Fast, fast, the gallants ride, in some safe nook to hide
Their coward heads, predestined to rot on Temple Bar;
And he — he turns, he flies: — shame on those cruel eyes
That bore to look on torture, and dare not look on war! 40

Ho! comrades, scour the plain; and, ere ye strip the slain,
First give another stab to make your search secure;
Then shake from sleeves and pockets their broad-pieces and loquets,
The tokens of the wanton, the plunder of the poor.

Fools! your doublets shone with gold, and your hearts were gay and bold, 45
When you kissed your lily hands to your lemans to-day;

And to-morrow shall the fox, from her chambers in the rocks,
Lead forth her tawny cubs to howl above the prey.

Where be your tongues that late mocked at heaven and hell and fate,

And the fingers that once were so busy with your blades? 50
Your perfum'd satin clothes, your catches and your oaths?
Your stage-plays and your sonnets, your diamonds and your spades?

Down, down, for ever down with the miter and the crown,
With the Belial of the Court, and the Mammon of the Pope!
There is woe in Oxford halls; there is wail in Durham's stalls; 55
The Jesuit smites his bosom; the Bishop rends his cope.

And She of the seven hills shall mourn her children's ills,
And tremble when she thinks on the edge of England's sword;
And the Kings of earth in fear shall shudder when they hear What the hand of God hath wrought for the Houses and the Word. 60

THE BRONZE WOLF OF THE CAPITOL

NOTES

N.B. Cf. = compare. Hor. = Horatius. B. L. R. = The Battle of the Lake Regillus Vir. = Virginia. P. C. = The Prophecy of Capys.

HORATIUS

The year of the city CCCLX: B.C. 394.

1. Lars: an honorary title among the Etruscans, like English 'Lord.'—Clusium: one of the most important of the twelve cities of the Etruscan Confederation.

2. Nine Gods: the nine Great Gods, so called, of the Etruscans, who alone had the power of hurling the thunderbolt.

3. house of Tarquin: read in a History of Rome an account of the Tarquins and of the expulsion of the family from Rome.

4. suffer wrong: remain in exile, — which was a grievous wrong in the eyes of the Tarquins and their friends.

14. Etruscan (or Tuscan): the adjective (here used as a noun) applied to the inhabitants of Etruria (or Tuscia). See map.

19. amain: without cessation. Cf. Shakespeare, 3 Henry VI, II. 1, "to London will we march amain." Other meanings of this word will occur.

25. Apennine: the Romans used the singular; we use the plural.

34. Pisae: on the site of the modern Pisa, near the mouth of the Arnus.

36. Massilia: modern Marseilles, early settled by Greeks, and always an important commercial city. — triremes: war-ships with three banks of oars.

37. fair-haired slaves: referring to Gauls who had been captured for sale in the Roman market. The Gauls are frequently spoken of as having light-colored hair, in marked contrast with the black hair of the southern nations. Cf. P. C. 193-195.

41. diadem of towers: Cortona was built on a very high hill.

45. Ciminian hill: near Lake Ciminus.

47. to the herdsman dear: because its waters were drunk by the "milk-white steers" (cf. l. 55 and P. C. 259, 260), a famous breed of oxen much in demand as victims for sacrifice on great occasions.

49. mere: this word is now rarely used except in poetry. It survives in the names of some English lakes, like Windemere.

58-65. old men . . . boys . . . girls: of course, because the young men were in the army.

61. plunge the struggling sheep: sheep are "plunged" to wash the wool before shearing.

62. vats of Luna, etc.: in allusion to the custom of "treading" the grapes.

63. must: the grape juice before fermenting.

66. thirty chosen prophets: augurs, who interpreted the will of the gods. Cf. note on l. 388.

71. verses: prophecies preserved in verse.

72. traced from the right: i.e. written from right to left, like Hebrew, Persian, and Arabic.

80. Nurscia's altars: Nurtia, or Nortia, was a goddess of the Volturnians, probably the same as the Roman Fortuna.

81. golden shields: the twelve golden shields of Rome. In the reign of Numa a golden shield (of Mars) was said to have fallen from heaven, "and on its continued preservation the continued prosperity of Rome was declared to depend." To prevent this from being stolen, eleven others were made exactly like it, so that no one might know which was the true one, and twelve priests were appointed to take charge of them. Cf. B. L. R. 624.

96. Tusculan: from Tusculum, a town of Latium. — Mamilius: son-in-law of Tarquin the Proud.

98. yellow: a very common epithet of the Tiber, probably from the color of its sands.

106. folk: most of the editions have "folks." Cf. "folk" in Vir. 62.

115. skins of wine: wine was transported from place to place in bottles made of leather.

117. kine: old plural of 'cow,' now seldom used.

122. rock Tarpeian: a precipitous cliff on the Capitoline, overlooking the Tiber, from which in later times traitors were hurled.

126. Fathers: senators. The expression "City Fathers" is not uncommon now.

132. Nor . . . nor . . . nor: neither . . . nor . . . nor.

134. Verbenna: "The name is one of Macaulay's own invention; it is not mentioned by any Roman writer" [Rolfe].—Ostia: the seaport of Rome, at the mouth of the Tiber.

136. Astur: "another name of Macaulay's invention. There is a Latin word astur, meaning a hawk" [Rolfe].—Janiculum: a high hill west of the Tiber, commanding the city; not one of the "seven hills."

138. I wis: originally ywis, an adverb meaning 'certainly.'

142. Consul: chief magistrate of Rome. There were two consuls; see note on B. L. R. 82.

144. gowns: the toga, called 'gown' in the Lays, was the outer garment of a Roman citizen. It was a loose, flowing garment and needed "girding up" when action was demanded of the wearer.

146. standing: explained by ll. 148, 149.

151. straight: for 'straightway.'

156. Macaulay has been criticised for using "Sir." Does the word seem out of place here?

177. twelve fair cities: i.e. of the Etruscan Confederation; see note on l. 1.

180. Umbrian: a people of eastern and central Italy.

181. Gaul: here refers to the people of northern Italy, or Cisalpine Gaul.

184. port and vest: carriage (or bearing) and dress. The word 'vest,' now restricted in meaning, is here used as a general word for 'clothing' or 'dress.'

185. Lucumo: the title of an Etruscan prince.

188. fourfold: having four layers of hide or metal.

189. brand: why should a sword be called (metaphorically) a brand?

192. Thrasymene: Lake Thrasymenus (better spelled Trasymenus).

194. war: warlike array.

199. false Sextus: Sextus Tarquinius, son of Tarquin the Proud.

200. deed of shame: the rape of Lucretia.

217. Horatius: surnamed Cocles (the one-eyed), was of patrician family, representing the Luceres, one of the original three tribes, the other two being the Ramnian (Ramnes) and the Titian (Tities). See the author's introduction, p. 29, l. 26.

229. holy maidens: the Vestal Virgins, whose chief duty it was to keep burning the sacred fire on the altar of Vesta. They were six in number, chosen from the highest families, and held in the highest esteem.

237. strait: not 'straight'; cf. l. 440.

242. Ramnian . . . Titian: see note on l. 217.

253. For Romans . . . in the brave days of old, etc.: men in all ages are wont to magnify the past at the expense of the present.

262. spoils were fairly sold: after the capture of the city of Veii by the Romans under Camillus, large quantities of the booty were distributed among the citizens. Later Camillus was accused of making an unfair distribution, and in consequence of the accusation went into exile.

267. Tribunes: officers of the city, who had certain extraordinary powers. They were originally appointed to protect the interests of the plebeians, and were themselves plebeians. — beard the high: cf. Scott's Marmion,

" And dar'st thou then
To beard the lion in his den,
The Douglas in his hall?"

274. harness: armor, an old use of the word; cf. "At least we 'll die with harness on our back," Shakespeare, Macbeth, V. 5.

277. Commons: the common people, plebeians.

304. Ilva: the modern Elba, still celebrated for its iron mines.

309. Nequinum: afterwards Narnia.

310. pale waves: the Nar was noted for its sulphurous waters and white color.

314. clove: cf. cleft, Vir. 205.

335. Ostia: see note on l. 134.

337. Campania: a seacoast country, southeast of Latium. — hinds: peasants, farm laborers; the word has no connection with 'hind' = 'deer.' Jack Cade's army is described in Shakespeare, a Henry VI, IV. 4, as "a ragged multitude of hinds and peasants."

354. brand: see note on l. 189.

355. none but he: what part of speech is 'but' here?

360. she-wolf's litter: refers to the suckling of Romulus and Remus by a she-wolf. Cf. P. C. 37-40.

384. Mount Alvernus: a mountain in northern Etruria.

388. augurs: official soothsayers, who had charge of the public auspices. The effects of lightning were carefully watched and interpreted by the augurs.

392. amain: with all his might. Cf. note on l. 19.

417. Was none: note the omission of the expletive 'there.'

440. narrow way: cf. "strait path," l. 237.

446. tide: always note figurative uses of words. What would be the usual prose word for 'tide'?

465. As to the highest turret-tops, etc.: how can such an extravagant statement be justified?

470. tossed his tawny mane: explain the figure.

483. grace: mercy. Cf. Shakespeare, Hamlet, I. 5, "So grace and mercy at your most need help you."

488. Palatinus: the hill on which the patricians resided, where the original settlement was. When Macaulay was in Rome in 1838, he wrote in his journal: "I then went towards the river, to the spot where the old Pons Sublicius stood, and looked about to see how my Horatius agreed with the topography. Pretty well: but his house must be on Mount Palatinus; for he would never see Mount Coelius from the spot where he fought." [Life and Letters, vol. ii, p. 29.]

492. father Tiber: i.e. the river-god. It should be remembered that the early Romans looked upon all objects and phenomena of nature as possessed each by its own invisible spirit or deity.

525. Bare bravely up his chin: in a footnote to this line Macaulay quotes from Scott

Our ladye bare upp her chinne.

Ballad of Childe Waters

Never heavier man and horse
Stemmed a midnight torrent's force;

Yet, through good heart and our Lady's grace,
At length he gained the landing place.

Lay of the Last Minstrel, I

542. corn-land . . . of public right: lands belonging to the state consisted mainly of territory taken in war. The various agrarian laws that were passed from time to time were concerned with the disposition of the public lands. Cf. l. 261.

545. Could plough: i.e. 'could plough around.'

550. Comitium : an open space adjoining the forum, in which certain assemblies were held.

561. the Volscian : the Volscians were a tribe of Latium, among the most formidable of Rome's enemies in the early period of the republic. Coriolanus is the hero of the Volscian wars.

562. Juno : the protectress of women and goddess of childbirth. Cf. Shakespeare, As You Like It, V. 4, "Wedding is great Juno's crown."

572. Algidus : a mountain of Latium, one of the Alban range.

582, 584. goodman . . . goodwife : master and mistress of the house. In Carlyle's letters to his sister he often speaks of her husband as "your Goodman."

THE BATTLE OF THE LAKE REGILLUS

The year of the city CCCCLI : B.C. 303.

2. lictors : attendants upon the higher magistrates — the consul had twelve — who carried as symbols of power bundles of rods called fasces, to which axes were added. But the axe was not used inside the city after the downfall of the kings. Cf. Vir. 224.

3. Knights : members of the equestrian order, wealthy citizens who, at this period of Roman history, served in the cavalry with a horse provided by the state.

7. Castor : i.e. the temple of Castor and Pollux (the "Great Twin Brethren"), erected in commemoration of the events recorded in this Lay. — Forum : an open place between the Capitoline and Palatine hills, where business was transacted, meetings held, etc.

8. Mars : i.e. the temple of Mars, the war-god.

13. Yellow River : cf. Hor. 98, 466, 470.

14. Sacred Hill : mons sacer, a hill three miles from the city, near the Anio, to which the plebeians had twice seceded when seeking redress of grievances.

15. Ides of Quintilis : the fifteenth day of July. July was the fifth month, March being the first. The name July was given to it by Julius Caesar, when he reformed the calendar.

17. Martian Kalends : the first day of March (the month of Mars), when was celebrated the festival called Matronalia in memory of the peace made by the Sabine women between the Romans and the Sabines 'he time of Romulus.

18. December's Nones: the fifth of December, when were celebrated the Faunalia, or feast of Faunus, the protecting deity of agriculture and of shepherds, also a giver of oracles.

15-18. Kalends, Nones, Ides: the Romans reckoned the days of the month backwards from these three points, the Kalends being the first, the Nones the fifth, and the Ides the thirteenth, except that in March, May, July, and October the Nones came on the seventh and the Ides on the fifteenth.

20. whitest: most propitious; in allusion to the custom of marking days of good omen in the calendar with white, as unlucky days were marked with black. Cf. ll. 156, 780.

24. from the east: the home of the Twin Brethren may be regarded as Sparta, in southern Greece, where they first received divine honors.

25. Parthenius: a mountain in southern Greece.

27. Cirrha: a town in northern Greece. — Adria: the Adriatic sea.

31. Lacedaemon: another name for Sparta.

33. Lake Regillus: regarding the locality of this lake, see the author's introduction, p. 60, l. 23.

63. what time = the time when. — Thirty Cities: the Latin cities that took the part of the exiled Tarquins.

78. Of mortal eyes were seen: for this use of 'of' = 'by' cf. "He was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve," 1 Cor. 15, 5; and "Touching this dreaded sight twice seen of us," Shakespeare, Hamlet, I. 1.

82. Consul first in place: "When both consuls were in Rome, each was superior during alternate months." [Gow.]

89. Latines: we now spell it 'Latins.'

91. did his office: i.e. read the proclamation that follows.

96. To bring the Tarquins home: it will be remembered that the whole family of the Tarquins was banished when Tarquin the Proud was dethroned.

114. hied him: cf. Hor. 145.

119. Conscript Fathers: the title by which the assembled senate was addressed.

123. choose we: is this equivalent to 'we choose' or to 'let us choose'? — Dictator: as here implied the dictator was an extraordinary officer, appointed in times of great danger. He had absolute power for the time being, superseding all other magistrates, but this power lasted for only six months, and generally was resigned as soon as the crisis was passed. The 'Master of the Knights,' or 'Master of Horse,' was his second in command.

125. Camerium : an ancient town of Latium taken by Tarquin.

126. Aulus : cf. l. 83.

132. axes twenty-four : i.e. twenty-four lictors, the number that would be assigned to the two consuls ; see note on l. 2. The axes in the fascēs symbolized the power of life and death.

143. With boys and with gray-headed men : cf. Hor. 58-65.

145. hard by : cf. "fast by," Hor. 193.

169. Witch's Fortress : the Circeian promontory, said by the Roman poets to have been the abode of Circe, the enchantress.

174. ghastly priest, etc. : near Aricia was a celebrated temple of Diana, who was worshipped with barbarous customs ; her priest was always a runaway slave, who obtained his office by killing his predecessor in single combat.

179. buffaloes : these must not be thought of as resembling the buffaloes of North America.

185. Laurentian : about Laurentum.

193. Mamilius : see note on Hor. 96.

200. vest : robe ; see note on Hor. 184. — of purple. . . . By Syria's dark-browed daughters : Syria was famous for its purple dyes.

203. sails of Carthage : Carthage, on the northern coast of Africa, preceded Rome as the commercial power of the Mediterranean.

209. false Sextus, etc. : see notes on Hor. 199, 200.

216. but he : cf. Hor. 355.

217. A woman : Lucretia.

225. So spun she and so sang she : this line has been called "strangely harsh" ; do you find it so ?

233. Tibur : by metonymy, the place for the people. — Pedum . . . Ferentinum : ancient towns of Latium that early fell into decay.

236. Gabii : the place where, according to tradition, Romulus was brought up.

237. Volscian : see note on Hor. 561. — succors : called "aids" in l. 674.

250. Apulian : Apulia was a division of southeastern Italy.

263. Pomptine fog : refers to the Pomptine marshes, low land between the mountains and the sea. Macaulay wrote, Jan. 1, 1839 : " I shall not soon forget the three days which I passed between Rome and Naples. As I descended the hill of Velletri, the huge Pontine Marsh was spread out below like a sea. I soon got into it ; and, thank God, soon got out of it." [Life and Letters, vol. ii, p. 41.]

278. Digentian : the Digentia was a small affluent of the Anio.

288. Fidenae: a city five miles north of Rome, which was frequently at war with Rome.

294. Calabrian: Calabria was a district of southeastern Italy.—brake: see dictionary.

307. pruning among his elms: grape-vines were often trained upon elm-trees.

325. clients: dependents, followers; plebeians protected by patricians and bound to render service in return. The relations of patron and client were regulated by law.

347. Titus: cf. ll. 249-252.

348. bestrode: stood over for protection. In Shakespeare's 1 Henry IV, V. 1, Falstaff says to the prince: "Hal, if thou see me down in battle, and bestride me, so; 't is a point of friendship."

360. Julian line: the same to which Julius Caesar belonged.

362. Velian hill: a ridge connecting the Palatine with the Esquiline.

368. made: is 'make at' a common expression for 'attack,' 'assault'?

375. the good house, etc.: Publius Valerius, elected consul in the first year of the republic, and three times afterwards, received the surname Publicola (Poplicola), "friend of the people," on account of his advocacy of the rights of the plebeians. The Valerius mentioned here was Marcus, his brother.

383. yeoman: not used in the sense of 'farmer,' but probably as members of a bodyguard, like "Yeomen of the Guard" of the English sovereign.

408. wist: imperfect of 'wit,' know.

412. gnawed the ground: mention another common expression similar to this.

416. Consular: one who had been consul, an ex-consul.

429. plumed: read in two syllables.

439. as: as if. — Apennine: see note on Hor. 25.

441. battle: battle-line.

444. amain: cf. the meaning here with that in Hor. 392; also cf. l. 462.

480. From Aufidus to Po: i.e. in all Italy, the Aufidus being in far southern Italy and the Po far to the north.

483. war: note the frequent use of this word for 'battle.'

495. lay on: cf. the familiar "lay on, Macduff," of Macbeth.

506. head-piece: helmet.

513. spurning: cf. "and spurning with her foot the ground" in Longfellow's The Building of the Ship.

547. Herminia : daughter of Herminius; so Virginia, daughter of Virginius, Julia, daughter of Julius, etc.

557. The furies of thy brother : the Furies, called by the Greeks Eumenides or Erinnyes, were avenging deities who pursued and punished men for their crimes. Here reference is made to the crime of Sextus Tarquinius towards Lucretia.

568. rich Capuan's hall : Capua was the chief city of Campania (southeast of Latium), noted for its wealth and luxury.

569. knees were loosened : a Homeric expression. The knees were regarded by the ancients as the seat of bodily strength.

572. the bravest Tarquin : cf. ll. 251, 252.

603. Samothracia : an island in the northern part of the Aegean sea, where Castor and Pollux were worshipped.

604. Cyrene : a Greek city in northern Africa.

605. Tarentum : a Greek city in southern Italy.

607. Syracuse : the chief city of Sicily, founded by the Dorian Greeks.

609. Eurotas : a river of Laconia, in southern Greece, on the banks of which was Sparta or Lacedaemon. Cf. ll. 29-32.

619, 620. Ardea . . . Cora : i.e. the men of Ardea and Cora. Cf. ll. 233-236.

623. hearth of Vesta : as typical of Rome itself. Vesta was goddess of the hearth and of family life; also of the city regarded as a family. See note on Hor. 229.

624. Golden Shield : see note on Hor. 81.

641. battle : i.e. line of battle. Cf. l. 441.

646. Celtic : Gallic, the Po being in Cisalpine Gaul.

649. Sire Quirinus : a name applied to the deified Romulus.

659, 660. Ferentinum . . . Lanuvium : see notes on ll. 233, 619.

674. aids : cf. l. 237.

689. Sempronius Atratinus : cf. l. 141.

692. chair of state : otherwise called the "curule chair," which was in shape something like a camp-stool. Cf. Vir. 116, 266.

695. the Twelve, etc. : see note on Hor. 81.

699. colleges : the word 'college' here means simply 'body of associates' or 'colleagues,' referring to religious bodies.

716. pricking = spurring, — an antiquated use of the word.

721. Asylum : Romulus is said to have opened an asylum, or place of refuge for people of neighboring states, on the Capitoline hill.

723. the fire that burns for aye : see notes on Hor. 229 and l. 623.

724. the shield : see note on Hor. 81.

745. Vesta : i.e. the temple of Vesta, "Vesta's fane."

747. the well: a pool or pond in the forum, called the "lake of futurna."

760. the Dorians: a division of the Greek people, whose chief city was Sparta.

768. Sit shining on the sails: an allusion to the electrical phenomenon now called "St. Elmo's fire," and to the superstition that associated this phenomenon with the Twin Brethren.

774. build we: cf. "choose we," l. 123 and note. — stately dome: it is said that Aulus the Dictator during the battle vowed a temple to Castor and Pollux. Such a temple was built in the forum opposite the temple of Vesta.

780-796. The worship of the Dioscuri (another name for the Twin Brethren) was introduced in Rome at an early period, and this festival on the 15th of July was continued for several centuries.

786. Mars: cf. l. 8.

VIRGINIA

The year of the city CCCLXXXII: B.C. 372.

2. Tribunes: see Introduction, p. 89, and note on Hor. 267.

5. fountains running wine: "A familiar touch of fancy in ancient legends, as in those of later times." [Rolfé.]

6. maids with snaky tresses: an allusion, probably, to the story of Medusa, whose beautiful hair was changed to hissing serpents on account of the jealousy of Minerva. — sailors turned to swine: Circe the enchantress "turned to swine" some of the followers of Ulysses.

10. the wicked Ten: those magistrates, called Decemvirs, who were appointed in B.C. 451 to codify the laws and to rule the city temporarily. They compiled the "Laws of the Twelve Tables," but afterwards refused to lay down their office, and treated the people in a tyrannical manner.

14. Twelve axes: see notes on B. L. R. 2 and 132. The axes were not to be carried with the fasces within the city limits.

20. With outstretched chin: what is indicated by this attitude? — client: see note on B. L. R. 325.

23. lying Greeks: as the expression implies, Romans held the Greeks in light esteem.

24. Licinius: see Introduction, pp. 89, 94.

31. tablets : boards smeared with wax for writing, etc.
35. Sacred Street : Via Sacra, the principal street of ancient Rome, which ran from the Capitol through the forum and beyond.
37. How for a sport, etc. : find the story in History of Rome.
38. Lucrece : in Latin Lucretia, wife of Lucius Tarquinius Collatinus, who was a cousin of the king.
64. Punic : Carthaginian.
74. The year of the sore sickness : refers to the great plague of B.C. 463. Our ancestors of a century or two ago were wont to speak of such a time as "the time of the great mortality."
76. augurs : see note on Hor. 388.
81. there was no Tribune : all the ordinary offices of state were discontinued on the appointment of the Decemvirs.—the word of might : a tribune could by his simple veto put a stop to the intended action of any other magistrate. See note on Hor. 267.
83. Licinius : the tribune who carried the famous Licinian laws, by which the patricians and plebeians were finally reconciled, the latter gaining the right to be elected to the consulship. Cf. l. 24.—Sextius : the first plebeian consul.
87. Icilius : one of the chief leaders in the outbreak against the Decemvirs. Virginia was betrothed to him.
89. that column : which commemorated the victory of the Horatii over the Curiatii in the Alban war during the reign of Tullus Hostilius.
94. Quirites : the name by which the Romans were addressed as citizens and civilians.
95. Servius : Servius Tullius, the sixth king of Rome, who reformed the constitution.—Lucrece : the accent here is on the first syllable. Cf. l. 38. So in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night, II. 5, "And silence like a Lucrece' knife."
96. the great vengeance : of course referring to the expulsion of the Tarquins.
97. false sons make red, etc. : Lucius Junius Brutus, the first consul at Rome, put to death his two sons, who had joined in the attempt to restore the Tarquins.
98. Scaevola : "the left-handed," who, on being condemned to be burned alive for an attempt upon the life of King Porsena, thrust his right hand into the flames, and held it there without flinching. Read the whole account in a Classical Dictionary or History of Rome.
102. Sacred Hill : see note on B. L. R. 14.
104. Marcian fury : Caius Marcius Coriolanus, who captured the Volscian town Corioli, was much disliked by the plebeians on account of his haughty bearing towards them, and was condemned to exile, B.C. 491. — Fabian pride: the Fabian family was one of the most celebrated of the patrician families for many centuries. Cf. B. L. R. 356. The reference here is probably to Kaeso (Caeso) Fabius, whose troops refused to storm the camp of a defeated enemy, and so to complete their general's victory and entitle him to the honors of a triumph.

105. Quinctius: Kaeso (Caeso), son of the famous dictator Lucius Quinctius Cincinnatus, was a violent opponent of the plebeians, and was driven into banishment.

106. the haughtiest Claudius: the father, or perhaps the grandfather, of Appius, the Decemvir, both of whom were noted for their active hostility to the plebeians. One of them was "hustled in the Forum in a riot which had been brought on by his overbearing conduct."

111. No crier to the polling, etc.: i.e. no elections were held.

112. No Tribune, etc.: see note on l. 81.

115. holy fillets: i.e. the priesthood. Fillets were bands of red and white wool tied with ribbons, worn by priests and vestals. — purple gown: i.e. gown with a purple border, the toga praetexta, worn by the higher magistrates.

116. axes: see notes on l. 14 and B. L. R. 2, 132. — curule chair: see note on B. L. R. 692. — the car: i.e. the triumphal chariot.

117. press: impress, force into the army.

120. usance: interest on money; the word in this sense is now obsolete. Shylock, in The Merchant of Venice, I. 3, says: "Still have you rated me about my moneys and my usances."

121. haggard debtors: the laws in relation to debtors were very harsh and uncompromising, and the debtors were mostly plebeians.

124. holes for free-born feet: the stocks.

130. Alban kings: Alba Longa, the most ancient city of Latium, is said to have founded Rome. See Introduction to P. C., p. 109, ll. 1-5.

133. Corinthian mirrors: Corinth in Greece was at this time a wealthy commercial city.

134. Capuan odors: see note on B. L. R. 568. — Spanish gold: Spain was noted for its mineral wealth.

148. great sewer: constructed by Tarquin the Elder, and still in use to this day.

149. whittle: knife for slaughtering cattle.

152. Farewell, sweet child, etc.: this speech of Virginius is considered by some critics to show Macaulay's weakness in dealing with the pathetic. It has been called "the weakest part of the poem, and in marked contrast to the concise and pregnant lines of the narrative elsewhere." The "contrast" is evident enough; does it show weakness? Following are two contrary opinions on this question: "It is a singular thing that Macaulay, whose sensibility and genuine tenderness of nature are quite beyond doubt, had almost no command of the pathetic. . . . Macaulay could not hold the more passionate emotions sufficiently at arm's length to describe them properly when he felt them. And when they passed, his imagination did not reproduce them with a clearness available for art. A man on the point of stabbing his daughter to save her from dishonor would certainly not think of making the stagey declamation which Macaulay has put into the mouth of Virginius. The frigid conceits about 'Capua's marble halls,' and the kite gloating upon his prey, are the last things that would occur to a mind filled with such awful passions." [J. Cotter Morison in English Men of Letters, Macaulay, p. 117.] "This is the only passage in the volume that can be called—in the usual sense of the word—pathetic. It is, indeed, the only passage in which Mr. Macaulay has sought to stir up that profound emotion. Has he succeeded? We hesitate not to say that he has, to our heart's desire. . . . This effect has been wrought simply by letting the course of the great natural affections flow on, obedient to the promptings of a sound, manly heart, unimpeded and undiverted by any alien influences, such as are but too apt to steal in upon inferior minds when dealing imaginatively with severe trouble, and to make them forget, in the indulgence of their own self-esteem, what a sacred thing is misery." [Professor Wilson in Blackwood's Magazine, vol. lii, p. 819.]

157. civic crown: a chaplet of oak-leaves with acorns, presented to a Roman soldier who had saved the life of a comrade in battle and slain his opponent.

182. Volscians: see note on Hor. 561.

184. leech: surgeon. Cf. "leech-craft," l. 119.

193. the nether gloom: the under-world, where dwelt the shades (manes) of the dead. Cf. l. 127.

200. Sacred Street: see note on l. 35.

202. Ten thousand pounds of copper: for four or five centuries after the founding of Rome copper was the only metal used for money, and even this, in the early times, was not coined, but passed by weight.

203. clients: see note on B. L. R. 325.

204. lictors: see note on B. L. R. 2.

213. cypress: an evergreen tree, sacred to Pluto, and a sign of death and mourning.

223. yeomen: see note on B. L. R. 383.

228. Pincian Hill . . . Latin Gate : i.e. remotely to north and south.

232. breaking up of benches : what for?

242. Tribunes : the cry now is for the restoration of the tribunes ; see note on l. 81.

249. Caius of Corioli : Caius Marcius Coriolanus ; see note on l. 104.

251. yoke : conquered enemies were forced to "pass under the yoke," which consisted of two spears set upright in the ground with a third laid across them. The word "yoke" in l. 256 is used in its more common sense. — Furius : Marcus Furius Camillus, the greatest general of his time, who took Veii, and drove out the Gauls from the Roman territory, B.C. 390. He was five times dictator.

257. Cossus : the most celebrated man of this name was Sergius Cornelius Cossus, who (B.C. 428) killed the king of Veii in single combat.

258. Fabius : see second note on l. 104. — chase : hunters.

266. put their necks beneath : cf. "High on the necks of slaves," Hor. III.

268. staves : sticks or clubs, plural of 'staff.'

269. or staff or sword : either staff or sword.

277. Calabrian : cf. B. L. R. 294.

278. Thunder Cape : the promontory Acroceraunium on the coast of Epirus, opposite the Calabrian coast of Italy.

THE PROPHECY OF CAPYS

The year of the city CCCCLXXIX : B.C. 275.

2. Sylvian : descended from Sylvius (Silvius), son of Ascanius and grandson of Aeneas, to whom and his followers the Romans liked to refer their ancestry. All the Alban kings had the cognomen Silvius.

3. Alba Longa : see note on Vir. 130.

4. Aventine : according to one tradition Aventinus was an Alban king, who was buried on the hill which took his name.

7. The children : Romulus and Remus.

8. The mother : Rhea Silvia.

23. the dead are living : in allusion to the supposed death and subsequent discovery of the twins.

25. bloody king : see l. 1.

26. lying priest : see l. 5.
27. raging flood : the Tiber.
34. yellow foam : cf. Hor. 98, 466.
37. The ravening she-wolf : cf. Hor. 360.
48. grandsire : Numitor.
58. horse-hair : the helmet plume.
71. holy fillets : see note on Vir. 115.
95. From head to foot he trembled : he was becoming inspired with prophetic fervor.
106. vines clasp many a tree : see note on B. L. R. 307.
110. Tartessian : from Tartessus, an ancient town of Spain, probably the same as Tarshish of the Bible. See second note on Vir. 134.
112. Libyan : African. Libya, the Greek name for Africa, was often used for Africa itself.
- 115, 116. Arabia . . . Sidon : in allusion to the various cosmetics and dyes brought from those places.
123. sprung from the War-god's loins : the father of Romulus was said to be the war-god Mars.
125. From sunrise unto sunset : does this expression refer to place or time ?
128. and name it by thy name : it was a popular but erroneous belief that the name Rome was derived from Romulus.
130. Vesta's sacred fire : the fire on the altar of Vesta was kept continually burning. See notes on Hor. 229, B. L. R. 623, 723.
149. Pomona : goddess of fruits.
150. Liber : ancient Italian divinity, patron of agriculture, later identified with the Greek Bacchus or Dionysus.
151. Pales : the divinity of flocks and shepherds.
153. Venus : goddess of love.
169. the soft Campanian : cf. note on "some rich Capuan's hall," B. L. R. 568.
171. Tyre : see note on l. 235.
173. Carthage : see note on B. L. R. 203.
175. Leave to the Greek, etc. : the pursuits of sculpture and literature are here considered effeminate in comparison with warlike pursuits.
- 177-184. As is well known, the Romans for many centuries excelled in all the arts of war.
177. pilum : the javelin (the peculiar weapon of the Roman legionary soldier) consisted of a heavy wooden shaft about four feet long, into the end of which was inserted an iron shank about two feet long ending in a barbed or flat heart-shaped point.

184. Jove's eternal fane: on the Capitoline hill.
185. Volscian: see note on Hor. 561, and cf. Vir. 182.
186. vail: the word means 'to lower,' not 'to cover.' Cf. Merchant of Venice, I. 1, "Vailing her high top lower than her ribs."
187. Soft Capua: cf. "soft Campanian," l. 169.
189. Lucumoes: see note on Hor. 185. — Arnus: a river of Etruria.
190. rods: i.e. the fascas, symbols of power; see note on B. L. R. 2.
191. proud Samnite: three wars were waged by the Romans against the Samnites, a race of central Italy.
193. Gaul: Rome was destroyed by the Gauls in B.C. 390, but was rebuilt.
195. fair-haired: cf. note on Hor. 37.
197. The Greek: what Greek general in particular was "the conqueror of the East"?
- The bard now reaches the events which this Lay is intended particularly to celebrate, namely, the war with Pyrrhus, king of Epirus.
200. huge earth-shaking beast, etc.: see Introduction, p. 111, l. 27.
205. Epirotes: men of Epirus, a division of northern Greece.
206. Wedged close with shield and spear: referring to the famous Macedonian phalanx.
209. false Tarentum: see Introduction, pp. 109, 110.
225. great triumph: i.e. the triumphal procession; cf. ll. 181-184.
230. the Red King: the name Pyrrhus is derived from a Greek word meaning 'fire,' and originally meant 'flame-colored' or 'red.'
232. gown washed white: see Introduction, p. 110, l. 18.
235. rich dye of Tyre: Tyre in Syria produced and exported large quantities of a purple or crimson dye obtained from a species of shell-fish. Cf. ll. 171, 172, also l. 116.
- 235-248. It should be remembered that in a triumphal procession the spoils of war were carried before the commander for the people to gaze upon.
249. Manius Curius: see Introduction, p. 111, l. 32.
254. embroidered gown: a general when celebrating a triumph wore the toga picta, "embroidered gown," and also the tunica palmata, an undergarment with embroidery representing palm-branches.
256. green crown: a wreath of laurel.
257. Rosea: a district of central Italy.
259. the bull: for sacrifice at the altar of Jupiter. — Mevania: an ancient town in Umbria, celebrated for its breed of white oxen; cf. Hor. 55.
264. Sacred Way: see note on Vir. 35.

266. Suppliant's Grove: there were said to be two groves in the depression between the two summits of the Capitoline hill.

269. O'er two bright havens, etc.: the situation of Corinth on an isthmus explains the expression.

271. gigantic King of Day: the famous colossal statue of the sun-god. It is said that at Rhodes (southwest of Asia Minor) there is hardly a day in the year when the sun is not visible.

273. Orontes: the principal river of Syria.

276. dark-red colonnades: made of the "dark-red" Egyptian granite, a specimen of which may now be seen in Central Park, New York.

280. Byrsa: the citadel of Carthage.

283. the sand of morning-land: probably referring to Arabia.

285. Atlas: the mountain in northwestern Africa.

THE ARMADA

In 1588 Philip II of Spain assembled a fleet of one hundred and thirty ships for the invasion and conquest of England. This fleet was known as the Invincible Armada. There were at the time less than eighty ships in the English fleet, but there were many private vessels ready to defend the coast, and all able-bodied Englishmen had received military training and were ready to take up arms at a minute's notice. Not only was the Armada unable to make a landing in England, but it was so battered by storms and gales, as well as by the English ships, that only a remnant of the original fleet finally returned to Spain.

1. list: wish.

4. spoils of Mexico: Mexico was then, and for more than two hundred years afterwards, a Spanish province. See Ivry 63.

5. warm summer day: it was in July that the Armada was first sighted off the English coast.

6. Plymouth Bay: here the leaders of the English fleet were waiting.

7. Castile: i.e. Spain. As the largest and most important of the states that united to form the kingdom of Spain, Castile was frequently spoken of as if it were the whole kingdom. — Aurigny's isle: Alderney, in the English Channel.

9. van: the foremost ships.

10. the tall Pinta: the Spanish vessels presented an imposing appearance because they rode so high out of the water, but this very thing made them clumsy and difficult to manage.

12. Edgecumbe's lofty hall: a beautiful estate on a headland on Plymouth Sound. It was so greatly admired by the Spanish admiral that Philip promised it to him as soon as England should fall into their hands.

14. post: a post rider; one who carried dispatches and letters.

15. sheriff: an officer whose duty it was to summon the men of his district to arms.

16. halberdiers: soldiers armed with halberds, or long spears.

18. Her Grace: i.e. Queen Elizabeth. The title 'Her Majesty' was sometimes used, but at this period the older form was more common.

20. the royal blazon: for a period of two hundred years the royal standard had three golden lions (crowned), emblematic of England, and three golden lilies, emblematic of France. See note on l. 25.

23. famed Picard field: i.e. the battlefield of Crécy, in the north of France; where in 1346 Edward III won a great victory over the king of France and his allies. All the flags fell into the hands of the English.

24. Bohemia's plume: the crest, or device, of blind old King John of Bohemia, who was killed in the battle. See the story of the Black Prince in any good history of England. — Genoa's bow: famous cross-bowmen from Genoa, who were assisting the king of France. — Caesar's eagle shield: the imperial shield of Rome bore an eagle. The son of King John of Bohemia, who was one of the allies, was the representative of the Holy Roman Empire, and so was entitled to carry "Caesar's shield."

25. Agincourt: another battleground where the English won a notable victory. Here in 1415 Henry V defeated the flower of the French army, and established a claim to the throne of France.

30. SEMPER EADEM (always the same): the motto of Elizabeth, as it had been of her father.

35. From Eddystone . . . to Milford Bay: i.e. from one end of England to the other. The places are easily located on the map. Eddystone Light is fourteen miles south of Plymouth.

37. war-flame: the custom of using a series of fires for alarm signals goes back to the earliest times.

38. St. Michael's Mount: a high rock off the coast of Cornwall, in the southwestern part of England. — Beachy Head: a headland on the southern coast.

41. Tamar (great water): a river in southwestern England.

42. Mendip's sunless caves: mines in the Mendip Hills, not far from the important seaport of Bristol. The famous Cheddar Caverns are also in the Mendip Hills.

43. Longleat: the magnificent Elizabethan residence of the Marquis of Bath. — Cranbourne's oaks: an ancient forest not far from Salisbury.

44. Stonehenge: a very ancient and curious double circle of upright stones on a plain near Salisbury. — rangers of Beaulieu: Beaulieu (now called Bewley) stood on the edge of the New Forest, a royal park. The game in the park was protected by keepers, or rangers.

46. Clifton down: a high plateau near Bristol.

47. Whitehall: then the royal palace in London.

48. Richmond Hill: near London. From here a remarkable view is obtained.

52. reeling spires: so frantically were the bells rung that the spires rocked under the strain. Cf. Browning's line in The Pied Piper, "Ring- ing the bells till they rocked the steeple."

53. the Tower: London's ancient fortress and citadel. It had been used as a palace, but in Elizabeth's day it was a prison for political offenders.

59. Blackheath: a moor or open common a few miles southeast of London. It was a favorite gathering place for mobs and rioters.

62. Hampstead's swarthy moor: the heather and gorse with which a moor, or heath, is covered are dark colored. Hampstead Heath is a favorite picnic ground for Londoners.

65. the proud peak: the Peak, in Derbyshire, to which this may refer, is not a mountain top, but a hilly district. Cf. the last paragraph of Scott's Feveril of the Peak. — Darwin: probably 'Derwent,' which is sometimes written 'Darwen.' The valley of the Derwent in Derbyshire is noted for its rocky gorges.

67. Malvern's lonely height: Worcester Beacon, the highest of the Malvern Hills.

68. the Wrekin: a solitary hill of trap rock not far from Shrewsbury.

69. Ely's stately fane: the imposing cathedral of Ely, which stands in the flat country near Cambridge and is visible for miles.

71. Belvoir: a famous castle in Leicestershire. — Lincoln: the cathedral of Lincoln has been called the finest church in England. It stands in one of the most ancient towns in Great Britain, between Hull on the east coast and Leicester. See note on l. 73.

72. Trent: a river of central England which drains a large district.

73. Skiddaw: a mountain in the Lake District of England. — Gaunt's embattled pile: Leicester Castle, a magnificent structure in central England. It was once the property of John of Gaunt, given to him by his father, King Edward III.

74. Carlisle: a city near the border between England and Scotland.

IVRY

On a wide plain in northwestern France, adjoining the villages of Ivry and Saint André, a great victory was won in 1590 by the Huguenot forces of France, who were trying to place Henry of Navarre upon the throne. Opposing them were the Catholic nobles and a formidable array of their supporters. The story is supposed to be told by a Huguenot soldier.

2. Henry of Navarre: one of the most romantic figures in history. He had been named as heir to the French crown, but the more rigorous Catholics, under the leadership of the Duke of Mayenne and supported by Philip of Spain, disputed the claim. When Henry finally came to the throne he declared himself a Catholic, possibly for the sake of bringing peace to his distracted kingdom.

5. Rochelle: a fortified seaport of France; the stronghold of the Protestant forces during the religious wars.

12. the League: a powerful association of Catholics.

14. Appenzel: a canton in Switzerland. See note on l. 61.—Egmont: the leader of the Flemish division. Flanders was under Spanish rule at the time, and thus belonged to the League. Count Egmont was killed early in the battle. See l. 42.

15. the brood of false Lorraine: a powerful French family, noted for their hatred of the Protestants. Mayenne and the dukes of Guise, who belonged to this family, were held responsible for much of the bloodshed of the time. Henry of Guise and his brother, the Cardinal of Lorraine, were in turn the victims of cowardly assassins. Neither Protestants nor Catholics could claim that they alone had suffered cruel violence.

16. truncheon: a staff of office.

18. Coligni: a leader of the Huguenots who had been killed in the massacre of St. Bartholomew. See note on l. 46.

30. oriflamme: the sacred banner of France. It was supposed to have miraculous power, and at first was carried only by monks or priests, but from 1124 to 1415 it was borne by the king. It consisted of a crimson flag with the loose end cut into points to resemble flames.

32. culverin: a long cannon.

33. The fiery Duke: i.e. Mayenne.—pricking: spurring.

34. hireling chivalry: Philip was paying some of the titled supporters of the League.—Guelders and Almayne: Guelders was a Flemish province; Almayne was another name for Germany.

36. golden lilies: the emblem of France. After the battle of Agincourt the national banner consisted of golden lilies on a blue field. See The Armada 25.

42. D'Aumale: one of the chief leaders of the League. He was related to the Guises. He attempted later to give France to the Spanish king.

43. Biscay gale: the Bay of Biscay is noted for its storms.

46. St. Bartholomew: a terrible massacre of the Protestants. It took place in Paris on the eve and day of St. Bartholomew, August 24, 1572. About 25,000 were slain.

54. Lord of Rosny: Maximilian, afterwards Duke of Sully and the trusted minister of Henry. — cornet (cor'net): the standard of a troop of cavalry.

61. Vienna . . . Lucerne: centers of Catholic interest.

63. Mexican pistoles: Spanish coins made from Mexican gold. See The Armada 4.

66. Saint Genevieve: i.e. Paris. Saint Genevieve was the patron saint of Paris, which was still in the hands of the Catholics. The battle of Ivry was followed by the siege of Paris, and it was not until 1594 that the war ended and Henry was acknowledged by all parties as the king of France.

THE BATTLE OF NASEBY

On June 14, 1645, a decisive battle was fought between the forces of the English king, Charles I, and the army of Parliament. Five thousand of the royal troops surrendered, and only two thousand followed their monarch in his headlong flight from the field. In 1649 Charles was condemned to death as a tyrant and a traitor, and soon afterwards Oliver Cromwell was made the head of the new government.

The story is supposed to be told by a Puritan soldier in the regiment of General Ireton, Cromwell's son-in-law. The length of the soldier's name and its curious form are scarcely exaggerated.

Naseby: about seventy miles northwest of London.

3. roust: a disorderly throng.

4. grapes of the wine-press: see Isa. lxiii.

11. the Man of Blood: i.e. King Charles.

12. Astley: an able Royalist general, in command of the central division of the army. — Sir Marmaduke: Langdale, in command of the cavalry on the left of the king's troops.—Rupert of the Rhine: Charles's nephew from Bavaria, who was in charge of the right division. He was a dashing leader, but not a very wise one.

14. The General: Fairfax, the commander in chief of the Parliamentary forces.

16. godless horsemen: this was a religious as well as a political war, and in the opinion of the Puritans the Royalists were utterly depraved.

22. Alsatia: Whitefriars, an outlying district of London, which had the privilege of sanctuary for debtors. For this reason it became a resort of criminals and lawbreakers of all kinds.—Whitehall: the royal palace in London.

29. Skippon: major general in the parliamentary army, and in command of the infantry.

32. Oliver: Oliver Cromwell was lieutenant general under Fairfax, and in command of the right wing.

35. the Accurst: no name was too bad to give the king.

38. Temple Bar: one of the entrances to the city of London. Here over the gateway the heads of criminals were displayed.

39. cruel eyes: the soldier is unfair. Charles's eyes were not cruel, nor had they watched torture.

43. broad-pieces: gold coins; twenty-shilling pieces.

46. lemans: a contemptuous name for sweethearts.

51. catches: light songs.

52. your diamonds and your spades: the Puritans regarded card playing with abhorrence.

53. miter: the symbol of a bishop's office.

54. Belial: the spirit of evil or lawlessness; in Milton's Paradise Lost, one of the fallen angels.—Mammon: the personification of earthly ambition; the god of gold.

55. Oxford halls: the university town of Oxford was the rallying ground of the king's party.—Durham: the bishop of Durham was a loyal supporter of the king. Durham Cathedral, in the northern part of England, is one of the most important of the English cathedrals.

57. She of the seven hills: i.e. the Church of Rome.

60. the Houses and the Word: i.e. Parliament (the voice of the people) and the Bible (the word of God).

PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF PROPER NAMES

TWO NOTABLE HISTORIES OF LITERATURE

BY WILLIAM J. LONG, PH.D. (HEIDELBERG)

DR. LONG'S "English Literature" and "American Literature" are among the most scholarly and readable manuals of literary history available for class use. They are companion volumes, written in the same spirit and organized on the same plan, aiming, first of all, to teach a genuine appreciation and real enjoyment of literature. Their order and arrangement make them particularly well fitted for the classroom, while their vigorous, picturesque style, their sympathetic appreciation of literary values, and their keen, critical judgments mark them as themselves a distinct contribution to our literature.

ENGLISH LITERATURE

8vo, cloth, 582 pages, illustrated, $1.35.

THIS book offers a direct, simple, interesting account of the great periods of English literature. It gives an interesting biography of every significant literary man in his own natural and social environment, followed by a study of his best works and a clear, concise summary or criticism of his place and influence in literature. Summaries of the period, selections for reading, bibliographies, a list of suggestive questions, and a chronological table of important historical and literary events of the period are included at the end of each chapter.

The book is unusual in the number and quality of its illustrations. The frontispiece is a lithograph in eleven colors, from a direct copy of an early manuscript of the "Canterbury Tales" in the British Museum.

AMERICAN LITERATURE

8vo, cloth, xxi + 481 pages, illustrated, $1.35.

IN distinction from other textbooks in the subject, Long's "American Literature" is emphatically a national history, recognizing no geographical or political boundaries but treating all writers as the product and interpretation of the national ideals of their age. The material is organized in five chapters: The Colonial Period, The Period of the Revolution, The First National Period (1800-1840), The Second National Period (1840-1876), Some Tendencies in our Recent Literature. The chapters parallel Long's "English Literature" in arrangement and in method of treatment.

The book contains over eighty pictures, many of them portraits not generally familiar. The frontispiece is an unusually fine reproduction from the etching by Charles F. W. Mielatz, "Poe's Cottage at Fordham."

AN ADVANCED ENGLISH GRAMMAR

By GEORGE LYMAN KITTREDGE, Professor of English in Harvard University, and FRANK E. FARLEY, Professor of English in Simmons College

12mo, cloth, xviii + 333 pages, 80 cents

A GRAMMAR DISTINCTIVELY FOR HIGH-SCHOOL USE WRITTEN BY RECOGNIZED AUTHORITIES
COMPACT, COMPREHENSIVE, CLEAR, AND LOGICAL

IN Kittredge and Farley's "Advanced English Grammar" elementary principles are treated with less elaboration than they are in books for grammar-school use, and the more difficult problems in syntax and analysis receive correspondingly greater attention. Among the topics treated with unusual thoroughness are the use of shall and will, the infinitive, participles, the verbal noun, indirect questions, conditional sentences, and the combinations of clauses in simple, compound, complex, and compound-complex sentences.

Constructions are explained in accordance with the historical fact as well as with the laws of thought, and an abundance of examples and exercises is given. The sentences used as examples are taken from standard English and American writers.

The book is unique in its adaptability as a reference book in connection with work in English literature and in composition and rhetoric. Many forms and constructions that occur in Shakespeare and the other older English writers are explained in notes. Distinctions of typography make clear what is of immediate importance in the practical study of modern English grammar and what is merely of interest to teachers and advanced students.
